Proud, Reliant Slovaks Look Toward Canada

East, West Tied

Bright national costumes preserve heritage of Czechs and Slovaks.

Where Are Sons Going?

By DAVID OANCIA
(Last of a Series)

BRATISLAVA, Czechoslovakia (CP) — The proud and independent Slovaks who form about one-third of this country's population of 14,000,000 like to talk of their connections with Canada.

Usually this takes the form of questions about the Canadian forests or mining and industrial centres such as Timmins, Windsor, Sudbury or Noranda.

During the three days I spent visiting this city on the Danube and the surrounding area I met scarcely a Slovak who hadn't some personal tie with North America. They talked of cousins in Winnipeg, sisters in Montreal or brothers and fathers who worked in the Canadian woods.

LIKE LUMBERJACK

Those who left for Canada and later returned have contributed some colorful phrases to the Slavonic language. When a man works hard, for example, he works "like a Canadian lumberjack."

Temperamentally the Czechs and Slovaks who make up this nation are almost as different as the English and Italians. The Czech is more reserved, calculating and dedicated to convention.

LONG TRADITION

The Slovaks have a long tradition of Roman Catholicism. Their feeling of independence seems to come naturally from an uninhibited life in the hills and mountains. They are more open and more curious about any stranger who may happen to be in their midst.

Languages are virtually the

Bettors Spend Horses Speed

Two track records and a betting record were broken at Sandown Park yesterday as 5,287 horse racing fans turned out for an eight-race card.

Desert Fire set a track record for the mile and 70 yards distance and Ky. Look set a track record for six furlongs.

Bettors pushed $135,734 through the parimutuel windows, more than $1,000 above the betting handle record set Thanksgiving Day, 1960. See story, picture on Page 10.

Rebel Troops Gaining In Argentina

BUENOS AIRES (UPI)—Rebel army units won four battles over troops loyal to Argentina's ousted military leadership in Buenos Aires yesterday.

One other battle was fought in the provinces. Rebel headquarters reported at least three persons killed and up to 122 injured in the fighting.

Unconfirmed reports indicated the loyalist commanders were regrouping their forces southwest of the city.

CIVIL WAR

Fighting that moved Argentina into a civil war between opposing elements of the military erupted at four main points in Buenos Aires—Constitution Plaza, Avellaneda Park, Chacabuco Park, and the city's car racing track.

The fighting primarily involved the armed forces so far and not the civilian population.

FIRE RETURNED

British-built Gloster Meteor jets carried out an intense bombardment of loyalist forces in the Chacabuco Park area which was also reported under heavy rebel tank and artillery fire.

Loyalist artillery there returned the fire but rebel ground troops began moving in against them.

The fighting here broke out in force at Constitution Square and raged for an hour and five

Argentine Briefing

By UPI

Argentina's civil war spread to the parks and the streets of the capital Saturday and the first serious casualty figures were reported. The situation at a glance:

- The opposing forces: The Blue or rebel forces, headed by Gen. Juan Carlos Ongania, and the troops loyal to ousted army commander-in-chief Gen. Juan Carlos Lorio.
- The issues: Ongania's faction wants immediate elections to prevent the possibility of military dictatorship. It refuses to accept the leadership of Lorio or the resigned secretary of war, Gen. Jose Cornejo.

Lorio's faction believes elections now would threaten the nation with a Communist or Peronist takeover and wants to postpone the voting and keep a strong military hand in the government.

- Military strength: The rebels control the nation's major military base, the Campo de Mayo, 20 miles outside the capital, and the army's only tank division. They also won the support of the Seventh Air Force Brigade, equipped with British Gloster jet fighters.

The navy thus far has remained neutral. The Loyalists have been handicapped by their lack of armor and air support and have had to battle tanks with machineguns and use anti-aircraft artillery as improvised anti-tank weapons.

- Political strength: President Jose Guido Friday withdrew his support from loyalist leaders Lorio and Gen. Bernardino Labayru, Lorio's chief of staff, ordering all troops to return to their barracks, an order that both sides ignored. Lorio, Labayru and War Secretary Cornejo also ignored their dismissals by Guido.
- Behind the scenes: Former dictator Juan Peron, living in luxurious exile in Spain. It was the Peronist gains in last spring's elections, the first the Peronists were allowed to contest since the dictator's ouster in 1955, that led to the military pressure that forced the dismissal of President Arturo Frondizi. Guido was put in office in his stead to rule at the sufferance of the military.

In Basilica

Vatican Bomb Fizzles

VATICAN CITY (AP) — A small incendiary bomb exploded harmlessly Saturday in St. Peter's Basilica, less than three weeks before the Roman Catholic ecumenical council opens in the largest Christian church in the world.

Vatican security guards shortly afterwards found a second detonator in the Basilica, but no explosives were attached to it.

PUFF OF SMOKE

The guards said the first device, a bottle filled with fluid, was found by a workman. They said the workman accidentally knocked the bottle over and it exploded "with a puff of smoke."

It was the second device to exploded in St. Peter's in slightly more than two months. No one was injured either time and damage was negligible.

PAPER-WRAPPED

Prior to the report by security guards, the Vatican press office said two paper-wrapped parcels containing inflammable or explosive material had been found.

Pope John XXIII expressed shock, and Vatican sources said the incident might indicate a possible intimidation campaign against the Ecumenical Council of the Roman Catholic Church opening here Oct. 11

Russians Protest Seizure

MOSCOW (AP) —The Soviet Union protested to the United States Saturday over the confiscation by Puerto Rican port authorities of a cargo of Cuban sugar en route to Russia.

In a note handed to U.S. Charge d'Affaires John M. McSweeney, the Soviet government demanded the return of the shipment to the Soviet Union and the payment of damages.

BRITISH SHIPMENT

The text of the note as broadcast by Moscow radio said the shipment had been seized when a British ship, the Streatham Hill, bound from Cuba to the Soviet Union, put into San Juan for repairs.

The note said the shipment belonged to the Soviet Trading Organization Sovtorg, and described the incident as "an act of open arbitrariness."

ACCEPTS RESPONSIBILITY

"The United States which has jurisdiction over San Juan bears full responsibility for the unlawful actions of the Puerto Rican authorities," it added.

The 120,000-bag cargo was attached by court action in San Juan Thursday to satisfy a Florida court judgment awarding the Terry Kane heavy machinery firm of Miami $833,978 damages for nationalization of its property in Cuba.

Trekkers Told Children Must Be Sent to School

Marching Freedomite parents must send their children to school or face prosecution, Education Minister Leslie Peterson said last night.

The minister said letters have been sent to all Sons of Freedom parents whose children are absent from school.

These include those remaining in the Kootenays and others among the 1,300 Sons camped at Bromley Park, near Princeton.

The letter, said Mr. Peterson, "simply advised the parents they must send their children to school to comply with the law."

If they don't, they face prosecution under the Public Schools Act and the government, if necessary, can make the children wards of the child welfare department.

AT LOCAL LEVEL

This was the procedure followed several years ago when Freedomite children were placed in the New Denver school.

But prosecution, said the minister would be "initiated at the local level.

"It is rarely started from the provincial office," he said.

And this poses the problem as to whether prosecution would be launched by the school board through which the transient Freedomites are passing, or the school board with jurisdiction over Kinnaird.

IMPROMPTU CLASSES

At the Bromley Park camp, some Freedomite children of school age have been attending impromptu classes taught by teen-agers who have Grade 8 or better education.

Mr. Peterson said whether these classes would be considered a replacement for actual school classes would be a matter for the courts to decide.

Where Are Sons Going?

PRINCETON (CP)—The population at Bromley Park appeared Saturday to be mysteriously and slowly diminishing.

Where once there were tents, now are empty spaces.

But officially, no such movement could be recognized. The senior police officer in this area was away for the weekend, and Mrs. Fanny Strogoff, the robust spokesman for the 1,300 Sons of Freedom Doukhobors who were camped at Bromley, maintained they were staying.

PROGRESS HALTED

Freedomites have been at Bromley for a week, peacefully established in the government site on the bank of the Similkameen River.

They had intended going to Agassiz in the Fraser Valley to be near scores of Doukhobor men jailed near there for acts of terrorism. Tuesday, progress of a trek from the Kootenay that started Sept. 2 was halted when a municipal bylaw was passed in the Agassiz area, saying the Doukhobors' presence constituted an emergency.

DOGS STATIONED

A police roadblock to stop the march anywhere west of Bromley has been maintained 24 hours daily. For five days dogs have been stationed there too, as an added deterrent.

But the Doukhobors may travel east, which they do to collect groceries and take baths in a nearby motel. Also, by continuing through the Okanagan Valley, it is an easy drive on to Kamloops, then back west along the Trans-Canada Highway to Hope and from there to any point in the lower mainland or Fraser Valley.

PREVENTS THEM

A direct route from Hope would not take the Sons through Agassiz where the bylaw prevents them from going.

Saturday, only three officers stood at the Bromley block, down seven from the usual 10 a shift.

Fanny said there will be prayer meetings today as there are every Freedomite Sunday.

Words, No Action Over Cuba at UN

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP) — Cuba was a live issue Saturday as Secretary of State Dean Rusk headed for New York City to confer with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko and others here for the U.N. General Assembly.

But it was all words and no action. The United States on the one hand and Cuba and the Soviet Union on the other exchanged charges in the assembly's general debate. But none of them made any move to get a special debate such as would give the charges more prominence.

BUSY SCHEDULE

Among the foreign ministers he is scheduled to see are Subandrio of Indonesia Sunday morning, Lord Home of Britain Sunday afternoon, Masayoshi Ohira of Japan Monday noon and Gromyko Tuesday noon.

An official source disclosed meanwhile that Cuban chief delegate Maria Garcia-Inchaustegui had put himself down to speak in the general debate in the late afternoon of Oct. 1.

EVE OF TALKS

That is the eve of a two-day meeting of Latin American foreign ministers that the United States has called in Washington to discuss what to do about a buildup of Soviet arms and personnel in Cuba. Since Rusk must get back for that meeting, he probably will miss the Cuban speech.

Regier Picked —Next Door

ABBOTSFORD (CP)— Erhart Regier, who resigned his Burnaby-Coquitlam seat in Parliament to give New Democratic Party leader T. C. Douglas a chance to run in a by-election, was named Saturday night to be the party's candidate in the Fraser Valley constituency nearby in the next general election.

Tito Top Target

Chinese Revive Tiff with Russia

TOKYO (AP)—Red China turned its ideological guns on so-called "modern revisionists" Saturday in what looked like a new round in its quarrel with the Soviet Union.

The attack, broadcast by Peking Radio, coincided with similar blasts during the week by Communist Albania which follows the Red Chinese line.

THREE CHARGES

Quoting from the People's Daily newspaper, Peking Radio accused President Tito of Yugoslavia of betraying Marxist-Leninism, consorting with "U.S. imperialists" and being a counter-revolutionary.

Chinese Communist criticism of what Peking considers weak Soviet policy has often been evoked under attacks on the Yugoslav leader.

HAS NOT CHANGED

Tito — and "other revisionists" — incorrectly assume the "predatory and aggressive nature of imperialism" has changed, the broadcast said.

The Albanian Communist regime, in open disgrace with Moscow since last year, pulled no punches in broadcasts denouncing both Premier Khrushchev and Tito as revisionists.

Rolls to Record

Flashing winning smile after breaking women's Canadian roller derby endurance record at the Esquimalt Sports Centre is Sherron Pineau, 18, of 1310 Burleith. She skated continuously for 18 hours and 15 minutes, or about 162 miles, in breaking old record of 18 hours set in Corner Brook, Nfld., in 1958.

Algerians Organize 'Rat Hunt'

ALGIERS, Sept. 22 (UPI)— Troop trains rolled in from western Algeria Saturday with reinforcements for Algerian army forces engaged in a massive "rat hunt" for guerrilla opposition to strongman Ahmed Ben Bella around Algiers.

As the military swept through the surrounding Mitidja Plain, new charges of "dictatorship" were fired at Ben Bella and his political bureau.

Leaflets accused the political bureau of preparing a "police state" with support from abroad.

Tory Foes Dared to Vote No

SOREL, Que. (CP)—Liberal Leader Pearson challenged the other two opposition groups Saturday night to join forces with his followers and topple the Conservative government at the first opportunity after Parliament opens Thursday.

Addressing local Liberal supporters in French, he said it is the duty of all members of the opposition to vote against the Diefenbaker government which had lost the confidence of 63 per cent of the electorate in the June 18 federal election.

"A member of the opposition," Mr. Pearson said, "could not therefore support the present government without betraying the mandate he has just received from the people.

"In my opinion, they have no choice; they must simply respect and reaffirm the verdict of their constituents."

He said Real Caouette, deputy Social Credit leader, said in a recent television interview that he would vote against the government if a no-confidence motion were introduced.

"Naturally," Mr. Pearson went on, "we cannot be sure that Mr. Caouette would take the same stand today.

The Liberal Chieftain repeated his pledge to introduce a no-confidence motion during the eight-day throne speech debate that is customarily held at the beginning of the session.

His group of 100 MPs would not press for a vote before any other business is transacted by Parliament. They would resist any government move to interrupt the debate for the introduction of legislation or spending estimates, he said.

The minority Conservative government is outnumbered 148 to 116 by the three opposition parties.

He said a new election would be mainly a race between Liberals and Conservatives. He was not afraid of the outcome because people had learned that a Conservative triumph meant austerity.

The Social Credit upsurge in Quebec had surprised everyone, but this "temporary situation" would not be repeated in the next election if Liberals learned from this year's "lesson."

The NDP had definitely been chased out of Saskatchewan and had temporarily replaced Social Credit in British Columbia.

The voters of Quebec who supported Social Credit thereby helped to maintain the Conservative government in power.

"In this true sense a vote for Caouette is a vote for Diefenbaker."

He said Social Credit supporters are realizing that the party has no chance of establishing itself in Canada and that it is the ally, consciously or not, of the Conservative party.

Quebec's Bid for Power Leaf of Strachan's Book?

By TERRY HAMMOND

CAPITAL REPORT

If B.C. Opposition Leader Robert Strachan is still something more than a hop, skip and jump away from appropriating the premier's plush office, it was obvious last week that he had at least borrowed Mr. Bennett's smile.

And it wasn't the premier's "let's-all-be-buddies" smile. It was the one that usually accompanies the digestion of a little mouse.

Mr. Strachan had just witnessed the Quebec government's approach to public utility expropriation and it was pretty obvious Liberal Premier Lesage did not borrow a leaf from B.C.'s set of take-over ground rules.

The Quebec plan—seek a mandate from the people and open avenues of arbitration for the price—could easily have come from Mr. Strachan's own pocket.

Early in 1960 he presented to the legislature the traditional CCF motion calling for BCE expropriation under the Public Power Act, a means which guarantees arbitration. Later the same year when Mr. Bennett called a provincial election Mr. Strachan and his CCF supporters sought a mandate from the people to take over the big power utility.

Simultaneously, Mr. Bennett and the Social Credit party sought a mandate for free enterprise—and got it.

Undeterred, Mr. Strachan on March 27, 1961, again presented a motion before the legislature calling for BCE expropriation by means of the Public Power Act. With its free-enterprise ballots still leaving ink stains in the pocket linings of 32 Socred MLAs, the government agreed to consider it—and what happened next is now history.

The government expropriated, but not under the Power Act, and then went on to try to close one door after another to avoid any legal meddling with the terms.

At this point, with the Quebec plan now out in the open, the casual observer would be ready to stand Mr. Bennett in the corner while Mr. Strachan delivers the valedictory oration to a hero-worshiping class of political students.

But lest the Opposition leader start to mount the podium it might be pointed out that graduation day is not quite at hand.

The proof of the utility expropriation pudding is truly in the eating; and so far the Lesage government has merely indicated that its mouth waters.

Hoots and catcalls are all that Premier Bennett has earned so far with his statement that he took over the BCE in the only fair way, but they don't seem to come from people who lend much credence to the principle that fairness is a two-edged sword.

The method of the BCE takeover was, for all its apparent invasion of the rights of shareholders, consistent with its motive.

Once he had embraced the principle that the BCE had to be taken over for the common good, Mr. Bennett could hardly have based the ground rules on any other principle. His use of the word fair means fair to the shareholders and equally fair to the people who have to foot the bill.

Mr. Lesage has so far been fair to the shareholders but a lot of water is going to go through the turbines before expropriation becomes a fait accompli, and the shares of one of the public utilities concerned have already shown a sharp increase.

It is conceivable that by the time the electorate expresses its wish the whole subject will be academic — the price, the legal barriers and the propaganda barrage having made the game worth somewhat less than the candle.

If the Quebec gambit achieves public ownership at terms both fair to the shareholders and fair to the public, Mr. Strachan will indeed have scored a major point over his Socred adversaries.

But if this admirable approach fails in its purpose, future governments faced with similar situations can hardly be blamed if they consign it to that bottomless bin labelled "good ideas that didn't work."

Far More Than Parking Involved in CIDC Pact

By IAN STREET

CITY HALL COMMENT

Prospects are remote indeed that either Victoria or Saanich will break its engagement with the Capital Improvement District Commission and remove the ban on curbside parking that was a condition of the beautification project for Douglas Street north of the Roundabout.

This would entail, first, return of $80,000 paid by the CIDC in grants for work on the project already carried out in the case of the city; and approximately $70,000 in the case of Saanich.

Also, far more important in the long run, any such move on the part of one or both municipalities involved would certainly jeopardize the working agreement between provincial government and local municipalities which resulted in formation of CIDC.

Objective of the CIDC and reasons behind its formation by the government in the spring of 1956 are sometimes forgotten.

One of these occasions when memory appeared to fail was during the last few months when small firms located on north Douglas claimed to have lost business because of the parking ban.

Local governments are sensitive to this kind of pressure, and rightly so, but it appears almost certain now that the ban will remain in effect.

The general philosophy behind the formation of the CIDC covered two main objectives: it was supposed to do for British Columbia's capital city those things which a commercial city would not do; and by carrying out the beautification projects this entailed to preserve and accentuate the individuality of Victoria as a tourist centre.

Deputy minister of municipal affairs J. Everett Brown, who heads CIDC, in the past has defined its function as that of providing "the frosting on the cake."

In keeping with these objectives, CIDC decided more than a year ago to promote beautification of north Douglas as the main entrance to Victoria.

So far it has poured some $150,000 into the project which included boulevard construction, tree-planting and flower boxes.

Easing of traffic congestion on this heavily travelled section of Douglas was only a secondary consideration in banning curbside parking on both sides of the main artery, according to the CIDC.

"The real reason was not so much to speed the flow of traffic," a CIDC spokesman said this week, "as to give Victoria a unique entrance, completely different from Kingsway in Vancouver or Highway 99 into Seattle which are cluttered with commercial developments."

Naturally, the CIDC had no desire to hurt small businessmen located on this section of Douglas, and it gave several months' warning of impending restrictions to allow them to make arrangements for off-street parking for their customers.

There is some doubt, however, in the minds of planners whether provision of off-street parking will save most of these small businesses which once flourished under different circumstances, but now appear to be out of place as land values soar and traffic grows heavier.

Jail-Weary Accused Suspends Own Term

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (UPI)—Willie Hill Jr. is one of the best customers Mecklenburg county recorder's court has had.

Therefore, Judge Winfred Ervin allows Willie to set his own sentence.

Willie, an elderly Negro, was hauled into court Friday for the 18th time. The charge, the same: Drunk in public.

First came the customary plea of guilty. Ervin reared back to see what the sentence would be.

Willie deliberated.

"I'm going to ask for a suspended sentence," he said. "It's the first time I've ever asked to be let go."

Willie explained that he has grown weary of prison—with few interruptions, his home for the past 16 years.

He got it.

Immunity Wears Off

Smallpox Vaccination a Must For Overseas Travellers

By JOSEPH MOLNER, MD

A traveller from Asia (reports the magazine "Modern Medicine") arrived in London, then became ill. Smallpox!

Within three weeks, 14 cases of confirmed smallpox occurred. Six victims died.

This is the whole answer to the complaints people make about having to get smallpox vaccinations before going abroad. (Well, strictly speaking you can go abroad without the shot, but you can't get back into the United States and Canada without proof of having had such a vaccination within three years.)

WEARS OFF

People often say, "But I've been vaccinated for smallpox. I can show you the scar."

If they only knew how many adults show a "take" they would change their minds. For immunity gradually wears off, and having been vaccinated as a child doesn't mean that you are still safe. When the repeated vaccination "takes," it is proof that you were not immune any longer.

Many of the nations of Europe and Central Asia have sporadic cases of smallpox.

We on this continent are being protected by this rigid regulation concerning vaccination. If a case did get in, it could spread!

The World Health Organization is devoting great effort to keeping track globally of cases of smallpox, cholera, plague, typhus, relapsing fever.

We are today on the brink of new vaccines for virus diseases, the polio vaccine and the flu vaccines being, it now seems, forerunners of others within the realm of possibility.

Dear Dr. Molner: I am 20 and want to have my right eye straightened. It has been turned in all my life. I want it corrected more than anything in the world, but could the operation endanger my life?—P.A.T.

This type of surgery rates as minor and is not dangerous. It is just about possible to guarantee that the eye will not only look better but see better, too.

Dear Dr. Molner: Since having a cold, I have not been able to smell or taste anything. Is this a serious condition or can it be cured?—MRS. L.P.

It is not too unusual following flu or a hard cold, and the sense of smell returns when it gets ready to do so. Not much can be done to speed it up.

Dear Dr. Molner: I have a friend who eats chewing gum, just like eating candy, from 5 to 15 sticks a day. I tell her it will kill her. She says she needs it to settle her nerves.—A.L.

No, it won't kill her. Why don't you find a confirmed alcoholic to worry about, and stop trying to frighten the gum out of your friend?

Slovaks Cherish Ties to Canada

same in the Czech and Slovak regions, but the Slovaks strive hard to preserve their linguistic heritage. Newspapers, schools and other institutions use Slovakian throughout.

HARBOR FEELING

Some view this as a concession by the central authorities in Prague to the feeling of Slovakian nationalism that has always been a characteristic of the region. The Slovaks still harbor the feeling that throughout history some outsider or other has always taken advantage of them. By outsiders they meant Hungarians, Austrians, Germans and even Czechs.

The Communists speak of Slovakia as the "land that expelled its children." Before the war, this region was backward. Farms were small and primitive. The economy just couldn't support everyone.

MANY EMIGRATED

"Next to the Irish, we had the highest number of emigrants," said a senior Slovakian planner.

"Before the war, every second young man left the region—usually for Canada, the United States or the Argentine."

The Communist planners concluded the only way to fight this trend—quite apart from sealing the frontier—was to bring industry to the area.

The reorientation following the Communist take-over in 1948 was an important factor in working out development plans.

ALMOST EVEN

"Our geographical position helped us in Slovakia," the planner said. "We are on the route which most of our foreign trade follows—toward the Soviet Union and the other socialist countries."

The planner gave these figures to show how the Communists have transformed Slovakia's economy:

Before the war the ratio of farm to industrial workers was eight to one; now its 3.1 to 4.3. Total production is 11.5 times greater. Slovakia turns out 18.5 per cent of Czechoslovakia's industrial goods compared with seven per cent before the war. The industrial labor force in the region has grown from 403,000 from the pre-war figure of 105,000.

SEPARATISM DENIED

The Communists strenuously deny that there has been any resurgence of Slovak nationalism such as that used by Hitler to set up the Slovak state under German tutelage.

Speculation by Western observers that separatist tendencies had developed followed a speech by Karold Bacilek, first secretary of the Slovak Communist party.

He claimed that vestiges of "bourgeois nationalism," "revisionism" and even "clerical fascism" of the type responsible for the establishment of the separate state during the war had infiltrated many parts of Slovak national life.

MORE POWERFUL

This Western view was that Bacilek's uninhibited condemnation indicated rapid economic development together with a reaction against Communist control has given traditional nationalism a modern and more powerful base.

In reply to questions about this, one Communist retorted: "You have only to compare what we had before with what we now have to see the falseness of the claim."

Labor Undecided

U.K. Liberals Join Tories In Favor of Market Plan

LLANDUDNO, Wales (UPI)—Britain's third party—the Liberals—enthusiastically joined Prime Minister Harold Macmillan's Conservatives Saturday in the drive to carry the country into the European Common Market.

Liberal leader Jo Grimond told the closing session of his party's annual convention that Macmillan is a Johnny-come-lately to the common market idea—but is nevertheless right.

LABOR ON FENCE

Grimond thus sealed what political observers called an unofficial Liberal-Conservative alliance on the market issue. Labor party leader Hugh Gaitskell and most of his backers remained sitting on the fence—neither wholly supporting nor wholly rejecting Britain joining the continental trade bloc.

His enthusiastic followers wildly cheered Grimond when he accused Macmillan of clinging to office at any price.

But the Liberals—who hold only seven of the House of Commons' 630 seats—also gave Grimond a standing ovation when he accused Gaitskell of nit-picking on the issue.

LESS LAND

India, with a population greater than the United States and Soviet Union combined, has only one-third the land area of the U.S.

Grimond said Gaitskell, who has called for a general election to decide the issue, is timid on the momentous decision Britain must take, and added of Labor leadership:

"They are the only generals in history who have ever attempted to ride into battle sitting securely astride a fence . . . Now they have even fallen off the fence, rather limply on the wrong side," he said.

OLD MAN'S CLUB

Grimond also poked fun at the commonwealth attitude toward British participation in Europe:

"It is sometimes the Commonwealth and not Europe which gives the impression of an old man's club putting up the shutters against the young world outside."

When a three-minute standing ovation ended, the assembly sang "For he's a jolly good fellow" and gave Grimond three cheers.

Soviet Experts Urge:

Get Ready Now For Space War

MOSCOW (AP)—Top Soviet military strategists have published a recommendation that Russia prepare for war in outer space.

Preparations for space warfare, the military leaders argued, are essential to meet alleged U.S. attempts to turn the cosmos into a theatre of war.

NEW STRATEGY

The suggestion appeared in a Red Star review of a new textbook on military strategy written by the Soviet Union's top military leaders.

The textbook, written under the direction of Marshal V. D. Sokolovsky, was said to be the first serious work on military strategy published in Russia since 1926.

Other points discussed in the review included:

● The strategists demand for larger ground forces than ever before for atomic age warfare.

(This appeared to differ from American strategic concepts calling for smaller and highly mobile tactical units.);

● All-out nuclear strikes against the enemy homeland including government and industrial centres. (This appeared to run counter to some Western strategists' theories that the Soviets might confine themselves to attacks on purely military objectives).

U.S. Policy To Assist British Bid

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States is quietly putting some of its weight behind British efforts to lower European Common Market tariffs.

The manoeuvre, authorities here said Saturday, is clearly in the United States' worldwide interests and a simple projection of standard U.S. policy toward the market.

Rare Legal Move Backs Negro

NEW ORLEANS (UPI) — Legal strategists for the federal government worked against a tight deadline Saturday in their efforts to get Negro James Meredith admitted to the University of Mississippi before registration closes Monday evening.

Government attorneys lost one bid in a U.S. district court at Meridian, Miss., Friday, but another vital round is scheduled here earlier Monday before the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals.

UNUSUAL HEARING

The appeals court hearing will be one of the most unusual in the court's history, an informed source said.

It will involve all nine of the court's sitting judges en banc (on the bench), and oral arguments will be heard. Never in the recent history of the court have all nine judges devoted their attention to one case, and usually when the court sits en banc all cases are submitted on briefs, rather than orally.

The unusual arrangement, the source said, was evidence of the importance the government attaches to the hearing.

CONTEMPT RULE

The government will ask the appeals court to return contempt judgments against Mississippi's 13-man state college board on grounds that board members defied federal court orders in not admitting Meredith to the university last Thursday.

A similar judgment requested against the chancellor, registrar and dean of "Ole Miss" was denied by a district court at Meridian Friday on grounds that the three officials were powerless to act other than they did. The justice department however, said they would include the three officials in the appeals court action.

Kennedy Lauds City's Courage

BERLIN (UPI) — President Kennedy praised West Berliners Saturday for their courage and perseverance in their struggle to remain free. At the same time the United States defied Soviet criticism and sent new troop convoys along the lifeline highway to Berlin.

Kennedy, in a message to the population of this isolated city, said the example set by Berliners had stirred the admiration of people throughout the world, and especially of Americans.

WORDS RELAYED

The president's message was relayed to Berliners by Franklin D. Roosevelt Jr., son of the late president, in a speech opening West Berlin's annual industrial fair.

"When I spoke with the President before I left the United States," Roosevelt said, "he told me of his admiration for the courage and perseverance which have enabled you to maintain your dignity as free men through a long period of tension."

"He feels that your example has stirred the admiration of the people throughout the world, particularly in the United States."

While Roosevelt spoke four U.S. convoys travelled the superhighway to and from Berlin carrying 647 soldiers in 109 military vehicles.

The army said the convoys met no interference when they cleared through Soviet checkpoints at both ends of the 110-mile highway crossing Communist East Germany.

The troop movement was part of a week-long operation under which a Berlin-based army infantry battle group of 1,500 men was being exchanged for a U.S. battle group from West Germany. It was designed to underscore U.S. determination to keep the Berlin access routes open.

RUSSIAN CHARGE

The official Soviet Tass news agency had charged Friday night the United States was keeping up tension in Berlin by sending the troops along the superhighway linking Berlin and the West.

The convoys are scheduled to be resumed Monday.

In another speech at the fair opening, West German economics minister Ludwig Erhard, vice-premier in Chancellor Konrad Adenauer's cabinet, said he was convinced the United States would cling to its rights in Berlin.

NOT INTIMIDATED

Erhard, who recently returned from the United States where he conferred with President Kennedy, said: "I am convinced beyond the shadow of a doubt that the United States is conscious of its historic tasks."

West Berlin Mayor Willy Brandt told the audience: "We will not be intimidated. We will not allow ourselves to be separated from our friends."

Before dawn Saturday, Communist border guards fired nine bursts from sub-machine-guns in two shooting incidents on the British sector border of Berlin. West Berlin police presumed the Communists were firing on refugees seeking to escape.

Rebels Winning In Argentina

minutes. Rebel tanks and troops moved on after apparently routing the loyalists.

The jets dived repeatedly over the plaza in support of the rebels but did not open fire there.

Heavy artillery fire from the big Campo de Mayo base, rebel headquarters located 20 miles northwest of Buenos Aires, began shelling the city racing track where loyalist military chief Gen. Juan Lorio's command headquarters were set up.

Huge columns of smoke and fire billowed up over the city.

OTHER CLASHES

While the fighting was raging here air and ground clashes were reported at two other cities, La Plata, 35 miles east of here, and near Rosario, 170 miles to the northwest.

The navy, apparently moving in opposition to President Guido, massed a flotilla outside the entrance to Buenos Aires. A navy announcement early yesterday that Guido was planning to hand over the country to the Communists and resign drew a flat denial from the president's office.

Dispatches from Rosario, Argentina's second most important city, said loyalist troops supporting Gen. Lorio began a drive on Buenos Aires from Corrientes and Entre Rios provinces in northwestern Argentina but were halted by rebel forces of the 11th Infantry Regiment.

The Buenos Aires Radio Belgrano Station, which is controlled by the rebels, broadcast a warning earlier that the rebel forces were readying an imminent attack and warned all civilians in areas involved to evacuate their homes.

In announcing its support of the rebels, the air force unit demanded the "unconditional surrender" of the loyalist forces.

The Archbishopric of Buenos Aires made a futile, last-minute effort to stave off the fighting as opposing forces mustered around Constitution Plaza.

The Dodgers

A SORT of mental shuffle-duffle is reported to be going on among the opposition parties at Ottawa as this week's opening of Parliament puts them on the spot. Each wants to eat its cake and yet have it, as it were.

It will take all three opposition groups to gang up together to defeat the government on a non-confidence motion, but this each would like to do without bearing the onus of forcing an election. The voters might conclude, after all, that by giving the Conservatives the most seats they had already elected a government and saw no need for another before determining how that government proposed to carry on.

Mr. Pearson perhaps, with a covetous eye on the premiership, seems willing to take the risk even though he will be equally responsible if the government is toppled. The other two groups, NDP and Socred, are reluctant to be tarred with the blame yet want to avoid supporting the government in a non-confidence motion.

Thus the mental fiddling around and the manoeuvres not to be last to vote the Diefenbaker regime out of office. There is the naive belief that only the last group to vote will bear the full brunt of any approbrium, the skirts of the others being clear because they got in ahead.

In fact, as will be obvious to every voter across the country, if the government is turned out before even having a chance to place its program before Parliament all three opposition groups will be guilty.

And all this jockeying before the opposition groups know what policies the government has in mind to cope with present national difficulties. What the country needs at the moment is some unity of aim and co-operation, not the upset and turmoil of another election.

Restoring the Ghosts

GHOST TOWNS are becoming popular. Where for decades they lay empty and forlorn, now they are being restored as a show-piece for modern tourists.

Barkerville is the conspicuous example; the recreation of this historic gold-boom town has proved to be a visiting bonanza. Now Cumberland talks of reviving a "ghost" section of its town if the provincial government can be induced to lend a helping hand.

Cumberland has a good case. If it was not the scene of a spectacular gold rush it proved ten years before Barkerville was invented that there is gold in black nuggets as well as in "them thar hills". It was away back in 1852, when Vancouver Island was really British Columbia, that the coal deposits were discovered which provided the stimulus to early prosperity in these parts.

Cumberland in the days that followed had a village as distinctive in its way as Barkerville—the Chinese mineworkers settlement. It is this "ghost" it is sought to revive as a tourist attraction.

There is no good reason why the Island shouldn't have its ghost town as well as the mainland; it is of more ancient vintage.

Poor Alternative

HARDLY LIKELY to gain him an avalanche of support is Alderman Geoffrey Edgelow's proposal that heavy trucks be required to take a circuitous route around the centre of the city by way of Cook or perhaps Vancouver Street.

The great roaring lumber carriers that thunder and snort along crowded Government Street on their way to and from Ogden Point certainly are out of place on that thoroughfare, adding seriously to the congestion and for good measure throwing in a bothersome contribution of exhaust fumes and din.

But would these leviathans be any more welcome on a long course through residential and park and seafront areas? The people who live in houses and apartments on Cook and Dallas surely will not think so—it is difficult to see how the trucks could use Vancouver Street—nor will the rush-hour motorists who find Cook and its crossroads enough of a trouble now.

Establishment of a truck route does seem, as Alderman Edgelow says, imperative. One has been mapped out by the city engineering department, along Store and Wharf Streets. This as the alderman also notes has the disadvantages of adding to the congestion around the Coho ferry wharf and still involving use of the Causeway.

But short of building a high-level bridge from Victoria West to the other side of the harbor, a prohibitively expensive undertaking, there would appear to be no better alternative, and certainly none that would suit everybody.

This is an unfortunate situation, but as long as Victoria is to have industry and particularly a valuable lumber-exporting industry it can only be regarded as a disagreeable necessity.

Golfer Honored

WHEN THE best extant amateur golfers converge upon Ito City, Japan, next month to play in the World team championship, among them will be Bill Wakeham, the 22-year-old Gorge Vale golfer.

Mr. Wakeham is one of four players chosen by the Royal Canadian Golf Association to represent his country in this notable event, an honor reflecting not only his distinguished play but also his sportsmanlike bearing on and off the golf course.

Ever since he won the Canadian junior golf championship as a boy of 16 in 1957, Mr. Wakeham has shown artistry and ability in the game, and in his determination to succeed he has never wavered.

In the past five years he has won many tournaments, culminating last July when he became amateur champion of British Columbia. For that effort he won a place on the B.C. Willingdon Cup team, and was the team's lowest scorer. He also reached the quarter-final of the Canadian Amateur championship, and his fine play in this event gained his place in the Canadian team.

The Victoria Golf Committee—representing the golfers of every club in the Victoria area—last week presented Mr. Wakeham with an inscribed gold watch in recognition of his elevation to the World Cup team, and as a token of well-deserved appreciation for the honor and dignity he has brought upon the local scene.

Mr. Wakeham will take with him to Japan the best wishes of all local sportsmen.

Thinking Aloud

". . . of shoes, and ships, and sealing wax . . ."

By TOM TAYLOR

NO MAN lives alone, unless like Robinson Crusoe he lives on a lonely island, and even Crusoe found company there. He formed a society of two. Modern cities are a society, closely-knit, with each member dependent on the other for some service or comradely association. Money, for instance, circulates around and touches many people on its journey. So do good deeds. Each widens the range of community contact and kinship. This is the basis of the United Appeal now under way. Money spent in a good cause grows in worth and service to others enriches the benefactor as well as the beneficiary. It would be a poor sort of society, in fact, did people not work and play together and assist one another in different ways.

POLITICIANS may debate the merits of the Commonwealth but hereabouts there's no doubt about brotherly feeling when it comes to a yacht race. Everyone I know has been hoping Gretel would win the America's Cup. The score is 2 to 1 against the Australian yacht as this is written and the odds seem even greater than that, but sentiment is all in favor of the Gretel crew. If the Australians hear about this it should cheer them up, as some sort of evidence that Canada is blood-brother to Australia. The hearth of Commonwealth association is not cold, even if some damp embers have been thrown on it lately. It would be a nice change, too, if the old-time "Hundred Guineas Cup" were to find a new resting place. For a while anyway.

A LITTLE lady I know was a blonde and now she is a brunette. I forbore to ask her if she had bought a wig; one musn't be too inquisitive. Wigs are coming into their own, though, according to the social pages. Fashion wigs, that is, not camouflage for bald heads. Women never go bald anyway. But we are used to paint and powder so there's no good reason why the head shouldn't be disguised as well as the face. I shouldn't think the hairdressers would like this, however; unless wigs also need a weekly set or a periodic permanent.

THE Canadian show at the Seattle fair has made people tattoo-minded, and so the appearance at the Arena next month of the Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders and the Royal Scots Greys should draw a packed house. In unison they'll be a spectacular sight as they play, dance and march in tattoo style. They are old comrades, these two regiments. They were in the Crimea together, the Highlanders in their kilts and the Greys on their horses. Which recalls a tale. The Russians had never before seen a soldier in "skirts," and when captured one amazed Russian officer asked who they were. The answer was that they were the wives of the men on the grey horses. Whether this satisfied the Russian officer I don't know, but assuredly their descendants will satisfy everyone who goes to see them.

A sporting note says F. Segura, of Ecuador, the oldest of the touring tennis professionals, is still a boy at heart. When he brings off a good shot he doesn't hide his glee. In short, he enjoys himself and his accomplishments, and that keeps him young. You can tell a man who is young at heart when he is enthusiastic about everything he does. Even when he laughs at his own jokes, a bore sometimes to the listener but proof of his brightness of spirit. Some people are born with this buoyancy, others have to work at it. But it pays off. Enthusiasm, gaiety, keen interest it is that prevents mental rust and, thereafter, soft muscles. So think of Segura and don't hide your glee when you bring off a good shot, any kind of shot. I should swallow some of my own medicine, though.

CANADA

'A sense of stirring like a wood in spring
Hope in the soil and courage on the wing'
—A. P. Herbert

By LEONARD W. BROCKINGTON

This is the first of three parts of a major excerpt from an article in Progress, The Unilever Quarterly, by Mr. Brockington, who is a member of the Canada Council, rector of Queen's University, and whose distinguished career has included being first chairman of the CBC and special assistant to the prime minister during the war.

PERHAPS it is because of the reticences we have inherited from the English and the Scots, that Canadians have not been very willing to talk about themselves. It has been observed that the English assume their superiority (with less confidence than of old) while the Americans assert theirs (today with perhaps diminishing assurance) and that between the upper millstone of British assumption and the lower millstone of American assertion we Canadians are sometimes ground rather small. During the war there was also a story current in Canada that the Americans used to walk into an Arab restaurant as though they owned it, and the British as though they did not give a damn who owned it. It is an understatement to suggest that both these practices have lately been modified.

If we are not, however, doing a great deal of talking to other people about ourselves in these days, we have been doing a great deal of talking to ourselves in the search for a definition of our national character and identity.

I share with the great majority of my fellow citizens a dislike of national boasting. We can probably claim, as the Americans said of themselves 60 or 70 years ago, that we are at the Cockcrow and the Morning Star. Certainly it is a joy to gaze in wonder at the radiance of the morning star but cockcrowing is not a particularly pleasant national habit especially if it summons up a picture of the proverbial rooster vain-gloriously strutting in his farmyard because he thought that the sun rose merely to hear him crow.

Before I try to mention a few of the arresting facts about this country, to sum up a little of the romance of our history and the contributions we have made, particularly to tolerance and reconciliation and freedom, I would like to quote some words that were once spoken by the public orator of Cambridge when the Rt. Hon. Mackenzie King, then prime minister of Canada, was awarded an honorary degree.

The words were spoken in sonorous Latin in accordance with the ancient custom of that university. This is a fairly literal translation of what was said: "Canada, first of the nations of the Commonwealth beyond the seas, strong in the equal partnership of two great mother races, illustrious in peace and in war, a great garden of the fruits of the earth and a mighty mother of men, wonderful in the glory of river, of mountain, of prairie and of lake and lovely in the delicate and changing beauties of sun and of snow."

History, especially for the last 150 years, has been kinder to us than to most nations. The geology of our rocks and the richness of our good earth have probably been the world's greatest natural bounty enjoyed by any land so spacious. Geography which moulded the infinite variety and beauty of our landscape has hitherto brought us our greatest trials and presented us with difficulties hard to surmount. Those trials and difficulties in some measure are likely to remain with us for ever.

Before I say a little about the coexistence of the culture and language of our two chief mother races and the strength which it brings to us both nationally and internationally, about our position in the Commonwealth, our relations with the United States, our passion for human brotherhood, our search for artistic expression, the changing pattern of our citizenship, the nature of our frontier, of our pioneers with whom optimism was a form of courage and pessimism a form of cowardice, about our willing offer of the duties and privileges of citizenship, and their acceptance by men and women of many racial origins, I would like to list a few facts many of which surprised me in my search for a few things worth saying. Some of them are trivial but often small things can be the great things. Some of them are unrelated one to another and are not placed in any sequence of logic or importance.

No country ever had a more wistful beginning than ours, according to all recorded history. The first structure ever built by a white man on the shores of North America was the great wooden cross (now, alas! no more), which the Breton sailog, Jacques Cartier, raised to the glory of God on the Gaspe Peninsula. The day was the Feast of the martyred St. Laurence; the year was 1534, 69 years before Queen Elizabeth the First of England died, 70 years before there was a United kingdom, and 176 years before St. Paul's Cathedral was completed and the citizens of London could see the sight (which heartened their descendants in the last Great War) "High over all—the Cross and the bell—of the riding, redoubtable dome of Paul."

Apart from some of the indentures which were the fashion in the early days, every man who ever worked in Canada has been free to come and go wherever he wished. No forest has been felled, no mine opened, no building erected except by the labor of free men. Never in the history of the world has so large a space been tamed by so few people for the use of mankind and never have law and order and disciplined liberty been established throughout so vast, so wild, and so remote, by so small a band of the officers of the law.

University enrolment at this stage of writing is 127,000—among the highest in the world. In the last decade the number of teachers has increased by 60,000 and enrolment in schools by 1,500,000. The expenditure on public and elementary schools has increased to $1,260,000,000. Other educational and vocational programs have been trebled. The number of books in libraries has been increased by almost 4,000,000 and the amount of expenditure on libraries in the same period has gone up by nearly $10,000,000. In the last 10 years, the number of telephones has increased from 3,000,000 to 4,250,000.

Our population when I came to Canada was just over 7,000,000. At the present time it is about 19,000,000 and it is estimated, and probably underestimated, that by 1980 it will reach 27,000,000 with a labor force of 10,000,000. Canadians of Anglo-Celtic origin are no longer in the majority and will never be in the majority again. Eight radio stations in the City of Toronto alone broadcast programmes every day in foreign languages, including Italian, Polish, Lithuanian, Ukrainian and occasionally Macedonian. There are in Toronto 40 foreign language periodicals published daily, weekly or monthly in 23 languages.

Our country is the second largest fresh water country and has more than one-half the world's fresh water resources, amounting to nearly 300,000 square miles.

We lead the world in the number of telephone conversations per head. In 1960 there was an average of 1,673 calls per telephone and 587 calls per person. Thus statistics seem to disprove the national reticence to which I have referred; but we talk more on the telephone perhaps because of our great distances and separations, because this is a country of neighbourly friendliness, or perhaps because families with what are usually the deep unspoken certainties of kinship and affection are more closely knit than they are in any other lands.

We are the world's biggest producers of wheat per head. Whereas at the beginning of the century two-third of Canada's population lived in rural areas and one-third in urban areas, today about two-thirds live in urban areas and only 15 per cent in rural areas. We have the longest single microwave radio relay network in the world, the longest gas pipeline, the longest oil pipeline. We are the world's greatest exporter of minerals.

We are the largest producers of newsprint, of which we produce more than the rest of the world together—it is said that four out of five newspapers in the Western Hemisphere originate in Canadian forests. For this I hope we will be forgiven. What a great thing it would be if we could select the newspapers which deserve the honor of the bulk of the bounty of our woodlands.

We are the largest producers of nickel and asbestos. We have the largest deposits of uranium, titanium and potash on earth. We have the majority of the world's known coal reserves. With our staircase of oil fields stretching from the Arctic Circle to the American boundary, and particularly with the huge deposits of workable tar sands in Athabaska and the Far North, we have the greatest untapped oil reserves in the world. None of these things exists because of our national virtues—they are cited as evidence of the lavish bounty of our national good fortune.

There can be no accountancy or bookkeeping of blood, sweat and tears. So, in the preceding little catalogue there has been no mention of Canada's contribution in men and money and resources to the Second World War nor of the flower of its youth who, matching the deeds of the brave of all the earth, helped to mend the things they did not break and cleanse the things they did not foul.

We, too, like all nations discovered how many "some bodies" there were in the streets where the "nobodies" lived. In 1939 the words written by Kipling about Canada in the First World War came true once again:

"From little towns in a far land they come
To save their honor and a world in flame."

Opening Wedge

By OTTO VON HAPSBURG

THE consequences of the agreement neutralizing Laos, which was widely celebrated as a high feat of superior diplomacy, are increasingly felt all over Southeast Asia. Domestically, the power of the Communists increases to a degree where already today one can foresee the end of the neutralist fiction and the open control of the Jungle Kingdom by the men of the Pathet Lao. In international affairs, the Laotian formula has become the battle cry of all those who favor surrender to totalitarianism.

Norodom Sihanouk, Cambodia's prime minister, has recently demanded for his country a status similar to the one of his northern neighbor. This is not surprising coming from a man who said that Communism is the wave of the future and that it would be criminal to try to fight the inevitable.

A similar current is also felt concerning South Vietnam. During August, one Dr. Pham Huy Co announced in Tokyo the formation of a Vietnamese National Revolutionary Council, of which he is the president. This organization allegedly was formed under conditions worthy of a cheap thriller—on board a junk sailing close to the Vietnamese coast. Its members are man claiming to be equally opposed to President Diem and to the Communists. Despite their rather dubious nature the doctor's declarations were widely reproduced in the international press. Certain commentators even went so far as to insinuate that Pham Huy Co might become Vietnam's Souvanna Phouma.

Dr. Pham Huy Co's past history is not widely known. After his graduation in 1948 he left Vietnam for France early in 1949. There he almost at once engaged in political activity among his compatriots. He proclaimed himself delegate of the Free Democratic Party.

Already at that time, well informed Vietnamese assert, his main political adviser was the sinister Nguyen Khac Vien, Ho Chi Minh's representative and as such leader of the Vietnamese Communists in France. These relations have continued since.

In his present action, Pham Huy Co is powerfully aided by Tran Thanh-Xuan, director of "Viet Tan-Xa," the press agency of the Communist Vietcong and by Mai Van Go, one of the leaders of the economic organization of Vietnamese Communists. These men try to give Pham Huy Co and his associates the world-wide publicity which they desperately need in order to engage in effective international action. Cambodia on the other hand provides them with a safe base of operations.

Pham Huy Co claims to be anti-Communist. Unfortunately his past seems to prove that he belongs to the group of "useful idiots," who always form the opening wedge for totalitarian penetration.

If he ever was called to head a government, real power would soon slip from his hands into those of his advisers. His is the type of an Asiatic Kerensky. This then is the figure a certain press offers as an alternative to President Diem.

It is said that some Western officials favor such plans. If this is really the case, it would show a frightening lack of political perception. Anyone even slightly acquainted with conditions in Southeast Asia must know that a victory of neutralism in Vietnam would inevitably lead to the collapse of the main defences of freedom in the whole area.

The Joy Of Trying

From The Ottawa Journal

THE lifelong ambition of Lord Wrottesley, of Staffordshire, who died recently at 98, was to breed a perfect spotted mouse. He did not succeed, nor did he expect to. But he kept trying.

The world will get along without a spotted mouse. It will get along without Lord Wrottesley. But not, perhaps, as well as it thinks. This purposeful age may seem to have little room for men who try, for the sheer joy of trying, to do what is probably impossible and certainly and obviously useless.

The purposeful people, who set out toward constructive ends, thinking only of reaching their destination and not at all of the joy of journeying, may be the salt of the earth. But the Lord Wrottesleys are the parsley of it. And, much as it would spoil their fun to think they were being useful, we may need them more than we know.

Narrow Escape

FROM COLONIST FILES

A Japanese bomber fleet launched a heavy attack on Nanking after Japan had set and reached a deadline for departure of foreign embassies from the Chinese capital, 25 years ago.

W. T. Straith, then an alderman and MLA-elect, wrote home from Japan to Mayor McGavin that he and his family had had a narrow escape from possible death in the fighting in China.

"Things were so noisy and active in Shanghai Harbor at the time we left that I was afraid your council would be one man short until December 31. A couple of days after we left, a shell dropped on our exact location and killed one American and injured 18 others. As it was, our boat was sprinkled with shrapnel and machine gun bullets while we were in the harbor."

In Ottawa, Agriculture Minister Gardiner said scurvy, resulting from malnutrition, had appeared in the Prairie drought belt, and announced the government would combat it by shipping carloads of fresh fruit, vegetables and other commodities to the suffering areas.

Saanich, faced with an increase in water rates by the city of Victoria, and finding its water supply increasingly inadequate, decided to look into the possibilities of substituting a system of wells which it thought would yield enough water to provide for the whole Saanich Peninsula and James Island without any service from the city.

The municipality of Oak Bay entered a contract for street-lighting, "essential to modern communities," and it was reported that southern Saanich and Sidney might do the same soon, 50 years ago.

"While much is in evidence on all sides to indicate the great progress being made by the city of Victoria, nothing better demonstrates the tremendous rate of expansion and development of this section of the province than the manner in which the neighboring municipalities are putting on the garb of civic status. In Oak Bay particularly is this noticeable, its close proximity to Victoria making it easy for it to lend itself to development along these lines."

Meeting in Geneva, the Inter-Parliamentary Union adopted a resolution interdicting the use of airplanes in war. Gustave Ador, president of the International Commission of the Red Cross, said that numerous protests had been received from Red Cross workers in the field against the Italians throwing explosives from airplanes. He added that the Italians had denied the allegations.

The fire department was under fire again from the Colonist, this time for not having an alert watch at the stations, 75 years ago.

When a reporter called at the Yates Street station about 10.30 at night, the paper said, "an air of peace and quiet reigned supreme and, wishing to gain some information, the pencil man called, whistled and tried to get an answer. The same quietness continued, and no sign of life was given. Not having a police whistle or a 20-ton gun . . . the news gatherer left, reflecting as to the time it would take to get an answer had it been necessary to report a big fire."

Babbly Style

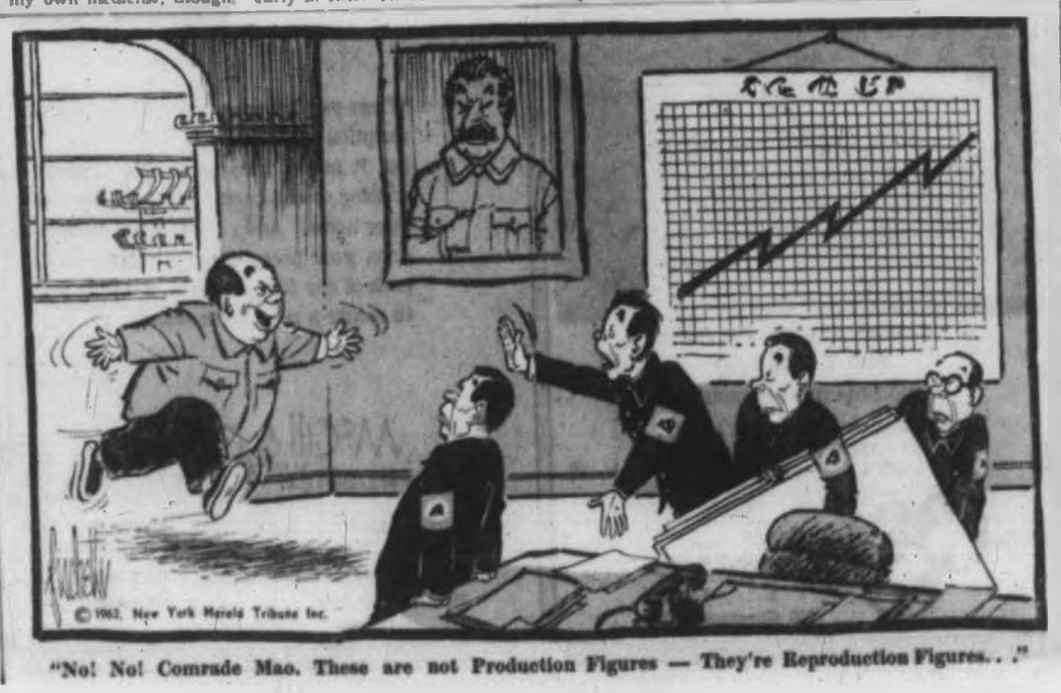

By GREGORY CLARK

NOBODY in real life talks the way Canadian radio and TV actors talk, especially when it is one of the English actors. In fact, even the English don't talk the way English actors talk. They have a tabbly, gallopy running-on style of speech that must be one of those traditional things you find in the theatre. The way Sir Martin Harvey did it, back in 1910; or the way Robertson or Tree did it goes on and on. I heard an English actor playing the part of a Canadian father in a radio drama with hilarious effect. Thank goodness it was one of those programs being run for the benefit of the director of it and the prestige of the CBC, as probably nobody was listening.

Tony Hancock the English actor whose BBC skits have enlivened the Canadian TV the past couple of summers talks the way the English talk. He warbles. His style of speech is as distinctive as that of Tallulah Bankhead, who, of course, says when she talks, says like a hound on a hot trail.

But Tallou is usually taking the part of the bored upper income bracket type of American and Canadian woman, all of whom say.

Glory-of-France Vision Could Upset Apple Cart

De Gaulle Playing High Stakes for NATO Control

By RUTHVEN E. LIBBY

AN engrossing political question in France these days is "After de Gaulle, what?" An equally important question in NATO capitals might be: "What is de Gaulle after?"

The latter question takes on added interest in view of the recent tour of West Germany by the French president, and reports from Bonn that he and Chancellor Adenauer have agreed to pool the resources of West Germany and France in order jointly to develop a strong nuclear striking force independent of NATO.

Germany reportedly would offer financial assistance and engineering help to enable France to produce a stockpile of atomic weapons "large enough for the military needs of France and West Germany" and the bombers to carry them.

This combined effort could make these two countries full-fledged members of the "nuclear club" in from two to three years. The report goes on to say that the plan will be implemented unless the United States promptly shares its nuclear striking force "within the framework of NATO" (which to de Gaulle means with France.)

... not convinced

If true, it would mean that Adenauer had succumbed to French pressure to choose between Paris and Washington and had elected the former.

If true, it would clothe with flesh and blood the spectre that has haunted Washington for some time: the fear that Russia will take drastic action to prevent West Germany's having more than a minor role in any European nuclear force that may be developed.

True or not, it adds an element of urgency to finding a solution to the problem of a NATO atomic force. It highlights the increasing shakiness of U.S. leadership of NATO, and it points up the lengths to which the French president is willing to go to achieve his ambitions for a Gaullist Europe.

In some respects de Gaulle is an anachronism; he seems to be living in the past. His differences with the U.S. are not trivial but basic; they will not easily be resolved.

His oft-repeated dissatisfactions with NATO (without whose protection he could not hope to succeed in his plans, but to which he consistently ignores his responsibilities) may from his viewpoint be well founded—but they are also extremely convenient as an excuse to seek to remodel Europe according to his desires.

'... It appears if he cannot run NATO he is willing to wreck it.'

No speculation is necessary as to what these desires are. Having perforce presided at the liquidation of the French empire, he seeks to restore the glory of France by making her the leader of Europe one way or another, preferably in whole but in part if need be.

It is this ambition which brings him into collision with Washington, since the aim of the U.S. is to strengthen the Western Alliance whereas De Gaulle's "Third Force" would destroy it.

The other five Common Market countries seek to establish, as a natural outgrowth of the European Economic Community, a politically integrated Western European Federation which would have some elements of supranationality, and whose common defence would remain under NATO.

De Gaulle wants no part of supranationality; he wants, instead, some sort of loose political confederation outside of NATO in which France would have a free hand.

Because it might tend to weaken French leadership, he is downright hostile to Britain's entering the Common Market, and if he cannot prevent it, will drive the hardest bargain that he can.

His efforts to establish a Paris-Bonn-Rome combine within the Six, to be led by him, were designed to give him a voice equally powerful with that of Britain and the United States.

In short, he is so restive with his NATO association that it now appears that if he can't not run it he is willing to wreck it.

Some 17 months ago De Gaulle demanded that NATO be reformed to:

- Recognize "the right and duty of European continental powers to have a national defence that belongs to them."
- To make more categorical commitments as to when, where, and how nuclear weapons would be used.
- To expand its defence commitments world-wide.

Everybody except De Gaulle regards the solution he has chosen — development of national nuclear forces — as the one intolerable answer and the method best designed to split the alliance.

The odds against De Gaulle's succeeding in developing his "Third Force" are great; such things as the staggering cost of developing an effective nuclear complex, the fact that the concept would write "Finis" to any idea of reuniting Germany, and the unwillingness of the remainder of the "Six" to be dictated to by France militate against it.

The inference is that De Gaulle is shrewd enough to know this; the conclusion is that he is playing hi. hand for all it is worth in an effort to transfer the leadership of NATO from Washington to Paris.

French Wooing Brings Problems

The Dilemma—As Germany Sees It

Der Spiegel, the influential West German news magazine, has recently looked into President de Gaulle's motives for seeking West German friendship and into his concept of a "Europe of states." The following is a condensation of the magazine's shrewd analysis.

ANIMOSITIES have always existed between de Gaulle and Anglo-Saxon prime ministers.

The long Gaul's preference for the Germans is of more recent vintage.

It began to blossom in the hour of Germany's deepest despair—1945—when the liberator-general triumphantly travelled through Southwest Germany, and his "heart began to contract," the heart—as he expressly notes in his memoirs—of a "European."

As surprising as de Gaulle's Germanic love affair and as old as de Gaulle's Anglo-Saxon aversions may be, new are the daring, the energy and the determination with which de Gaulle demonstrates his feelings.

De Gaulle's blunt wooing for German amity, and his policy toward Germany has its own problems:

- The difference between French and German ideas of a future Europe, and
- The precarious situation in West Berlin.

Bonn wants an integrated Europe, including a political union.

Regarding Berlin, Bonn wants France—as well as Britain and the U.S.—to stick to their responsibility for the former German capital.

A fully integrated Europe would exclude Britain. Britain would hardly submit itself to a continental European capital or sever its ties to the Commonwealth or the U.S.

Therefore Britain might retreat from its Berlin engagement.

Secondly, an economic difficulty arises as well th Britain's application for membership in the European Common Market.

If Britain should be accepted by the ECM, Bonn realizes this would mean the end of an integrated Europe as Adenauer sees it. Europe's political union would then lose the character of integration.

For Bonn, all adds up to this:

Should continental Europe go it alone in accepting responsibility for West Berlin's freedom?

Evidently de Gaulle is the only statesman in the West who pursues this target as the final solution.

As the final goal, de Gaulle visualizes a Europe from the Atlantic to the Urals with a balance of power in the middle. In the far future de Gaulle even sees a sharpening of the Russo-Chinese conflict which could one day prompt the Russians to seek Europe's help.

After de Gaulle returned to power in 1958, he formulated his ideas of a "Europe of states," but hopes for this are hard to define. Adenauer, during his July, 1962, state visit to France, plainly stated that this concept is not sufficiently integrated to suit him.

And if de Gaulle maintains his demands along these lines, Bonn will be faced with two far-reaching alternatives:

- To insure the U.S. guarantee for Berlin, to include Britain in the ECM and the political union of Europe which means dropping all plans for integration, or
- To follow a road leading to nuclear armament of continental Europe, to the isolation of Europe between the two world powers—the U.S. and Russia—which would in turn lead to a hopeful or gloomy, but in any case uncertain future.

In the second alternative, the Soviet Union could very well regard de Gaulle's European nuclear project as an unfriendly act and—hoping for a disgruntled U.S.—carry out or at least ultimatively threaten preventive measures.

Thus would emerge a global political constellation which, according to de Gaulle, is already a reality.

De Gaulle believes there exists an unwritten U.S.-Soviet understanding to "go easy" with one another whenever conflicts develop along the borders of their respective regions of influence.

Logical conclusion: In case of a Berlin conflict, which is the most probable, the Americans would use nuclear weapons after a short phase of conventional warfare, but would only hit strategic Soviet targets in middle-Germany, Poland and/or other East European nations. Likewise, Russia would only attack American targets on the European continent.

This advance sparring would last until a peaceful arrangement is found or until the strategic development would force both powers into an all-out nuclear holocaust.

For de Gaulle, this vision is unacceptable.

Nuclear Issue

France, U.S. Poles Apart

By HAROLD MORRISON

The United States has a tendency to scoff at French "grandeur" and to dismiss as "nonsense" persistent French questioning of how far the United States would be prepared to go in the defence of Europe if it meant pushing the nuclear button.

McGeorge Bundy, President Kennedy's security adviser, has bluntly stated that beside the "reality" of the U.S. nuclear pledge to the defence of Europe "much recent dialectical discussion of details of nuclear tactics is pompous nonsense."

He makes his statement in the current edition of the foreign affairs quarterly, where he criticizes unnamed allies for a lack of reciprocity with the United States and admits relations with France are "temporarily and partially out of order."

The position that Bundy reflects — and it is known his article was cleared with the president—contrasts with the equally blunt statement of French Defence Minister Pierre Messmer, who in a magazine interview raises doubts whether Europe can rely on the United States and for that reason presses his point that France must have a nuclear force for her own security.

A point involved on both sides of the controversy is that the United States has promised to give consideration to the idea of developing an independent NATO nuclear force and has stated it is prepared to act on the basis of what Europe itself might consider best.

Behind this attitude may have been U.S. reasoning that there are so many minor frictions and power plays in the European family that no single idea would emerge on which the entire family would agree. Therefore there could be no criticism of Europe continuing to rely on the United States for nuclear defence.

Now there seems to be a reshaping of the U.S. position.

Last month, J. Robert Schaetzel, U.S. deputy assistant secretary for Atlantic affairs, delivered a speech at Mount Allison University in New Brunswick where he said the United States has "encouraged study of various multilateral approaches," to the NATO nuclear force concept.

But he added that the United States considers that a NATO nuclear force "must be so integrated that no country could withdraw its contribution and reconstitute it as a national force."

In other words, it would seem, the United States would ask its Allies to give up their military sovereignty, as far as nuclear troops are concerned, in order to participate in a nuclear deterrent over which they could have little control because they couldn't threaten to withdraw.

This is the kind of political act the United States knows many of its Allies would be reluctant to execute. It is the kind of thing that tends to give weight to the French view that a NATO nuclear force is unattainable.

The point that stands out most clearly in U.S. "engagement" of a NATO nuclear force is that the United States does not want proliferation of nuclear missiles, fearing this might engulf her in a nuclear war not of her own choosing.

The question unsettled in the minds of some Europeans is whether the United States is more concerned about her self-preservation than the defence and welfare of Europe.

Rich, Poor, Young, Old Share Bounty

Sweden Takes Care of Everybody

Social Welfare All-Embracing

STOCKHOLM (AP) — Millionaires and paupers, young and old share in the bountiful benefits of Sweden's vast social welfare system.

Every Swede is protected against financial hardships connected with unemployment, occupation hazards, disease, childbirth and old age.

While controversy flares in other countries over medical care proposals, all Swedes are insured for medical care—and the government pays part of the cost.

The cost of this sweeping socia' welfare system is high—and it is growing higher—but there is no public agitation for any retrenchment. All the democratic political parties back it. It would be political suicide for any party to advocate any departure.

The welfare state is such an accepted way of life here that many Swedes were astounded by the "medicare" controversy in the United States and by doctors' boycott of a large-scale medical care program in Saskatchewan.

Started in 1901

It has taken the Swedes a long time to build their elaborate welfare system. The first legislation on compensation for accidents at work was passed in 1901. The foundations of a national pension scheme were laid in 1913.

The real trend toward a welfare state started after the First World War and was accelerated during the 1930s. It stopped during the Second World War when neutral Sweden was hard-pressed to keep its economy functioning. Since the war the system has been steadily strengthened. It now touches almost every aspect of life from a person's first breath to his last.

What does this vast program embrace?

These are some of the main benefits:

● Compulsory health insurance covers every Swede irrespective of age, health, wealth or sex. The insurance provides free care in a hospital ward, substantial refunds on private doctors' bills and prescriptions and the payment of daily sickness benefits, about two-thirds of the loss of income. All mothers receive free maternity and delivery care.

● A basic old-age pension for everybody who reaches 67. This amounts to the equivalent of $540 a year for a single pensioner and $855 a year for a married couple. Thousands of pensioners live in modern pensioners' homes. The rents are modest.

Aid to Mothers

● An annual, tax free cash payment of $90 to all mothers for every child under 16.

● Free medical check-ups and dental treatment for school children and free school lunches.

● Housing subsidies for large families with small incomes.

● A virtually free vacation trip annually for children and mothers with children who need it.

● Children's pensions payable to those under 16 who lose a father or mother. Special children's allowances are paid to children under 16 whose parents are invalids or old-age pensioners.

Compulsory sickness insurance was introduced Jan. 1, 1955 to replace a system of subsidized voluntary insurance.

Under the compulsory system a patient can choose his own doctor. Three-fourths of the doctor's bill is covered by insurance. The patient pays the remainder. Medicines for certain chronic illnesses — such as insulin for diabetics—are free. Everyone gets reduced prices on most other medicines if they cost more than three crowns or about 60 cents.

There is no time limit for medical treatment compensation outside hospital wards. Free hospital care in general wards is covered for up to two years.

Three-Way Financing

This national sickness insurance is financed by the insured persons, their employers and the state. The cost per person depends on his income. It averages out to about 50 crowns (approximately $10) a year a person.

Thus health program cost $220,270,270 in 1960 — the last year for which figures are available. Of this, member contributions covered about 46 per cent, employers paid 30 per cent and the government 25 per cent.

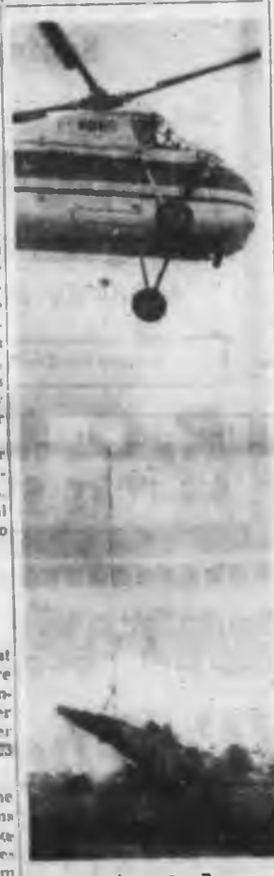

The cost of this and of some of the other welfare programs is steadily increasing. Total social welfare expenditures jumped by 8 per cent from 1959 to 1960 to a total of $1,473,359,000. This represented 14.3 per cent of the national income.

Welfare and defence expenditures have pushed taxes to one of the highest levels in the world. A corporation and its shareholders may pay up to 80 per cent of net profits in taxes. And there is a growing awareness that taxes cannot be pushed higher without harmful effects on both industry and the people.

60 Cases Of Polio

OTTAWA (UPI)— Paralytic polio cases in Canada numbered 60 by Sept. 15, the health department reported Friday.

The figure compared with 142 cases in the same period a year ago and 719 in the epidemic year of 1960.

The 1962 death toll from polio remained at one, in Quebec. A year ago there were seven deaths.

Firm Only Hires Workers Over 45

HARTFORD, Ill. (AP) — The luckless job seeker walked out of the tannery office, sadly shaking his head. Within the space of an hour he had been rejected by a nearby refinery as too old and by the tannery as too young.

He was in his early 40s.

The International Shoe Company tannery, reversing generally accepted personnel practices, hires only workers who are 45 or older.

It's the idea of R. H. Richards, 61, International Shoe vice-president in charge of subsidiary operations. He believes industry stands to benefit "when the old bugaboo of not hiring men over 45 years of age goes down the drain where it belongs."

The tannery has held to the strange hiring policy for five years now.

During the Second World War employment at the tannery, one of three operated by the firm, reached a peak of 1,200. After the war employment dropped to its present 300 production workers, with the lease seniority, the tannery found itself with a disproportionate number of older employees.

Richards and other executives took a hard look at production and cost figures of the younger men who had departed and decided personnel bosses don't know what they're talking about.

"This idea that a man has passed his peak in productive capacity after he reaches the age of 45 is so much talk," Richards said.

"It has been our experience that men in this older age bracket are reliable, do their work well, are easier to work with and, above all, have more mature judgment than many younger men."

The tannery's workers range in age up to 76. Only two are under 45 and they were employees before the 45-or older hiring policy went into effect. The majority are 51 to 56.

Employees may retire at 65 under the standard company pension program but they don't have to.

International has had workers as old as 85, including one octogenarian who asked his foreman if he couldn't switch to another job in the plant "with more of a future."

Concert Records

Made In Moscow

By DELOS SMITH

For the first time American technicians have made a recording in Moscow. That's the news, for whatever you want to make of it.

To this reviewer the manufacturer's hoopla over it is a lot of noise about little. Why should the record listener care where a record was made—as long as the sound which comes off it is satisfactory?

The sound which comes off this one is of Prokofiev's third piano concerto and Rachmaninoff's first.

The pianist was the American Byron Janis, and the orchestra was the Moscow Philharmonic with Kyril Kondrashin conducting (Mercury 50300).

Despite the difficulties of taking American technicians and their equipment all the way to Moscow and working in a strange hall the quality of the recorded sound is excellent.

And so is Janis' piano playing, of course. He is particularly brilliant with the Prokofiev, which is a somewhat brittle piece and requires the soloist to keep a firm hand on all the elements less they fly apart. Rachmaninoff's first has been resistant to the best endeavors of many pianists and it is not surprising that Janis found it immalleable.

To Sylvia Marlowe belongs the achievement of the best recording of Bach's "The Goldberg Variations" since the late Wanda Landowska made hers. Miss Marlowe proved, as Miss Landowska proved, these variations are the spirit and tones of the harpsichord, and much is lost when they are played on the piano (Decca-710056).

* * *

Of much more than routine interest are Mario Castelnuovo-Tedesco's settings of the poems of Juan Ramon Jimenez, who won a Nobel Prize in 1956. Five of the set called "Platero and I" are tenderly played by Andres Segovia, the greatest living master of the guitar, with all of his celebrated feeling for whimsical emotion. Platero was the poet's donkey, by the way (Decca-710054).

Record Rain Wets Florida

MIAMI, Fla. (AP) — Florida officials Saturday began assessing damage done by a small low pressure area which dumped record amounts of rain on the central and southern parts of the state and left one dead in its wake.

A record amount of rain was dumped on Sarasota—nearly 17 inches in a 24-hour period. This was more than experienced from Hurricane Donna which hit the area in 1960.

More than 100 families were evacuated from their Sarasota homes.

Tributes to Jazz Classicists Masterpieces for Collectors

By WILLIAM D. LAFFLER

Every once in a while a record company will issue a major production in tribute to a star no longer with us.

Last year Verve offered a magnificent, five LP set, "The Bill Broonzy Story."

Late this summer two equally desirable sets were put on the market — Mildred Bailey's "Her Greatest Performances" (Columbia C3122) and "Historical Masterpieces" by Charlie (Bird) Parker (Charlie Parker PLP-701).

The Mildred Bailey set contains three LP's that span her career from 1929 through 1946, from the days she sang with such great instrumentalists as Bunny Berigan through sessions with the Dorsey Brothers, Coleman Hawkins, Benny Goodman, Artie Shaw and Teddy Wilson.

There is no doubt that Miss Bailey was one of the great song stylists of our century. Even the early records' poor fidelity fail to hide the emotion in her voice.

Parker now is a sort of a saint to modern jazzmen. This set released through an estate established by his son, also contains three eloquent LP's but Bird was such a prolific artist that many more LP's will be needed to cover the work of his altogether too-brief life.

To jazz lovers, the Parker album is a masterpiece to be cherished. Even the short numbers, such as "White Christmas," fire the imagination.

Those who might object to Parker's wild interpretation must also take into account that "White Christmas" is a commercial song that has nothing to do with the spiritual meaning of this day.

Selected Singles — "House Warmin'" by Howard McGhee and The Blazers (Argo 5422); "Swing Low" by Floyd Cramer (RCA Victor 47-8084); "Maybe" by Clyde McPhatter (Mercury 72025); "Rain Rain Go Away" by Bobby Vinton (Epic 5-9552); "My Foolish Heart" by Rene Fontaine (Dot 45-16383).

LP's of the week — "Mono: "The Golden Hits of the Everly Brothers" (Warner Bros. 1471). Ten songs which helped the Everly boys to high places, among thel "I'm Not Angry" and "Cathy's Clown." Stereo: "Something Special" by The Kingston Trio (Capitol ST 1747). Good arrangements of 12 tunes, best semming to be "Old Joe Clark."

Slides Slated For Art Club Opening Meet

Persons interested in joining the club will be welcomed at the meeting. If not able to attend, they may contact Mrs. D. G. Ingham, president, or J. W. B. Malerby, treasurer, for information.

Nothing New About Snorkel Idea Creatures Have Used It for Ages

Diving With Cal Smith

The snorkel is one of the most basic swimming aids ever used and although it has only recently been named after the famous German schnorkel submarine, its principle has been known for many centuries.

But long before man ever thought of swimming, many other creatures had perfected the use of the breathing tube.

The most obvious example of insect snorkelers is the common mosquito.

Not that I mean to imply that the annoying little monster swims on its back breathing through its stinger; but in the larvae and pupa stages it has two hollow breathing tubes in its anal end. Thus equipped, the insect spends its early life hanging from the surface of any stagnant pond or swamp like a monkey from a tree, breathing through its tail.

If this sounds strange, a little thought will show the wisdom of such an arrangement. If the creature's lungs were accessible through its mouth, it would be unable to eat; the first time it opened its mouth it would drown.

A similar system is common to most air breathers, including the whale and porpoise, which must surface under water.

However, in the case of these creatures, a special breathing passage has been provided through a hole in the top of their heads.

While many species of flies other than the mosquito are equipped with breathing tubes on their tails during the early stages of their development, the larvae of the Diving Beetle (commonly known in this stage as the Water Tiger) is one of the most vicious of all the aquatic insects and could easily be considered the top spearman of the insect world.

Predatory, cannibalistic, hard shelled, and hard hitting, the water tiger hangs from the surface like the mosquito larvae while waiting for its dinner.

When it spots its prey, the breathing tubes are closed off and it dives, striking with speed and force enough to penetrate the tough shell of a brother or completely disembowel a luckless tadpole or minnow.

Fortunately, these creatures grow to a length not longer than two inches. Were they much larger, they would completely dominate the underwater world.

But these "teen-agers" of the insect population aren't the only ones who possess snorkels. Adult water scorpions, too, have breathing tubes. They consist of two half-tubes on their tails which, when placed together, form a snorkel as efficient as any designed by man.

The two main species of scorpion are Nepid and Renatra, the former resembling any common water beetle and Renatra looking uncomfortably like the Praying mantis. Both however, are deadly predators and must be considered monsters to the planktonic creatures of the marine universe.

So, you see, skindiving is really a rather ancient sport having its beginnings in the dawn of history. And for those SCUBA divers who tend to look down on the inadequacies of the lowly snorkel, think of all the creatures who make their living with them!

Member of military galaxy to appear at Memorial Arena next month is this colorful-looking piper of Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders.

Old Favorites And New Thrills

By BERT BINNY

Events onstage are piling up at a furious clip these days. The Victoria Symphony has five pairs of concerts before Santa Claus arrives. Famous Artists have four and the Musical Art Society has four.

In addition, the Theatre Guild offers two if not three major productions before Christmas and the other theatrical organizations doubtless will be doing likewise. St. Luke's Players completed the run of their opening production, Lily, the Felon's Daughter, only last night.

The Southern Vancouver Island Drama Association, however, apparently is rather perturbed at the sagging standard of its annual festival as to both the quality and the quantity of the plays presented.

A moment's glance at festival programs since 1934 shows clearly there is room for disquietude. The number of entries has diminished sharply over the years. Admittedly, also, some perfidious blows have been dealt at quality but these always hurt the more if quantity is suffering at the same time.

This whole problem is to be discussed at the annual election meeting Oct. 18. Meanwhile, the 1963 festival has been set for Feb. 11 to 16. These dates are especially and carefully chosen to avoid clashes with other events. The clashing among festivals and so on last year was positively fierce.

It Could Go Kaput

The association is writing to all affiliated drama groups inviting their support in a general sock-pulling-up effort. Failing such an effort the festival could very easily go kaput. Many others have.

Famous Artists opens its 1962-63 Victoria series with an extra when the Scots Greys and the Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders appear at Memorial Arena Oct. 4.

At the Royal Theatre, Oct. 16, the regular season starts with the Foo Hsing Theatre. Translated, this actually means "revival" theatre but, since it has been in continuous existence for hundreds of years, the term "revival" is either rather a misnomer or a very loose translation. The Foo Hsing Theatre, from the Republic of China, plays the World's Fair in Seattle just before coming here.

A return visit from the delightful Obernkirchen Children's Choir follows Oct. 22 and internationally-known violin virtuoso Ruggiero Ricci is billed for Nov. 22.

Christmas Fantasy

The Musical Art Society offers a Christmas Fantasy Dec. 3 in which choral direction is by Vera Barclay and choreography by Bebe Eversfield. The society then winds up 1962 with its popular annual Carol Tea Dec. 15 at the Empress Hotel, with the Christ Church Cathedral Boys' Choir conducted by Richard Proudman.

An especially attractive extra event is the concert by the famous Royal Canadian Engineers' Concert Band Oct. 24 at the Royal Theatre.

In addition to band items to please all choices, there will be soloists and a barbershop quartet. The conductor is Lieut. Leonard Camplin and the event is sponsored by the Victoria Armed Services Centre.

Featured this week in the Odeon Theatre's Golden Operetta series is Oscar Strauss' The Chocolate Soldier. Screenings are at 2 and 8:15 p.m. on Wednesday only.

The Theatre Guild opens its first major production of the season Saturday with Ladies In Retirement. The play runs every week night at 8:15 at the Langham Court Theatre.

The Ladysmith Little Theatre has George Bernard Shaw's Pygmalion in rehearsal for production Oct. 5 and 6. Vancouver's Sydney Risk is directing and the cast has Doreen Boulton, Evelyn Smith, Diana Waddell, Norma Fraser, Carol Eastham, Mary Crowe and Linda Geernaert.

Highlight Returns

On the male side are Bob Brophy, Carl Walker, John Tooker, Jack Atkinson, Jim McKinley and Howard Crimp.

Gian-Carlo Menotti's Amahl and the Night Visitors will begin a series of performances in Christ Church Cathedral Dec. 27 by permission of the archbishop, the dean and chapter.

This was a highlight of the season when presented a couple of years ago.

Amahl will be played by 14-year-old Cathedral chorister John Peter. Peggy Walton Packard returns as Amahl's mother and Norman Tyrrell again sings Kaspar. Stanley Martin and Derek McDermott are Melchior and Balthasar respectively with Larry Johns as the Page. Musical director is Richard Proudman; stage, Audrey Johnson; technical, Maurice Johnson; choreography, Lisel Petter. Costumes will be by Margaret Hall.

Dancers and other stage extras are still required. Phone GR 7-3198.

An opportunity to see a series of feature length French films has come to Victoria.

A series of outstanding French films will be presented in matinee and evening performances Oct. 13, Nov. 12, Jan. 7 and 14, Feb. 11 and March 11 at the Fox Theatre. Ophelie, Les Trois Mousquetaires and Les Passage du Rhin are among the titles.

Crash Claims Second Victim

LEOPOLDVILLE (AP) — A second member of the Swedish crew of a UN reconnaissance plane shot down in north Katanga has died, the UN announced Saturday.

There has been no identification of gunners who shot down the twin-engined Dakota Thursday with 10 men aboard. Four others were injured. A UN board of inquiry is investigating.

Not a Soul in Sight

Hollywood Tour Dull and Void

Clubs and Societies

This disturbed the retired Kentucky postman sitting across the aisle.

"Just where is Hollywood, anyway?" he asked.

The question bothers many of the 3,000,000 tourists who annually seek the legendary glamour town.

Most return home having seen only the bronze stars implanted in the sidewalk along Hollywood Boulevard by the movie town's Chamber of Commerce.

POSTAL ZONE

Hollywood, they learn, is only the name of a Los Angeles postal zone. There are studios in the neighborhood, but they are making television films. Even most of the television film making is not being done in Hollywood, but in the area surrounding.

So the visitors take a bus tour—only to find that Disneyland isn't in Hollywood either. That's a separate tour in the other direction.

COMPROMISE TOUR

The compromise is the Hollywood-Beverly Hills tour. Its promoters promise that it will give a view of movie stars' homes.

"We're going to Beverly Hills," the driver tells the passengers. "It's a city entirely surrounded by Los Angeles. That's where most of the movie stars live."

The bus swings into the palm-lined streets of Beverly Hills.

"HE'S AWAY!"

"That grey one is Jimmy Durante's home—he's at Lake Tahoe now," the bus driver explains. "That's where Jean Hersholt lived before he died, that other one to our right.

"The green house on the corner—the one with all the foliage—used to be Dinah Shore's and George Montgomery's, until they were divorced. Nanette Fabray lives there now."

NO ONE IN SIGHT

There isn't a movie star around. In fact, there is no one in sight. Row upon row of homes—Spanish style, Tudor manors, modern rectangles—stand well-kept and silent, as if their owners were victims of some strange disaster.

To Sing Here

Island Coal Mine Reprieved

By HARRY YOUNG
Colonist Business Editor

Coal may be taking a back seat to electricity, oil and natural gas in many industries, but there's one in which it appears to be indispensible —manufacturing cement.

Early in 1961, B.C. Cement Company was informed by Canadian Collieries Resources that the Tsable coal mine on Vancouver Island was to be closed down, and that the supply of coal for Cement's plant at Bamberton would be discontinued.

With no other coal supply immediately available, B.C. Cement decided to switch over its operation from coal to bunker fuel oil. The necessary firing equipment was installed, along with oil storage tanks at the plant.

But when the switch-over was made it was discovered that the oil fuel injected into the cement kilns failed to produce the right type of limestone clinker, and the company was forced to look for another source of coal.

Eventually it was arranged that a number of the former employees at Tsable would reopen the mine and recommence the supply of coal.

That was done, and while oil is still partly used in the operation, coal is again king at Bamberton, and probably more important still, Vancouver Island's nearly moribund coal industry was given a reprieve.

CASH GALORE

Power Corporation of Canada Ltd., which last year owned shares in other companies with a market value of $87,000,000, has become the storm centre of take-over and merger plans that could leave it with a lot of cash and not so very much else.

An important holding company, Power Corporation has left its many shareholders wondering what the future holds for it.

The first decimation of the Power Corporation holdings came when the B.C. government took over B.C. Electric over a year ago. Power Corporation was the biggest single shareholder in B.C. Power (parent company of B.C. Electric) and its holdings were valued in June, 1961, at over $8,000,000.

Power Corporation has already been paid out part of the compensation for expropriation of its interest in B.C. Electric, and more will follow once the B.C. government-B.C. Electric legal dispute is settled.

Another big cash income is due coming to Power Corporation if the province of Quebec goes ahead with its plan to take over the privately-owned hydro-electric companies in that province.

Power Corporation owns about $10,500,000 worth of shares in Shawinigan Water and Power, and a further $5,000,000 worth of shares in Northern Quebec Power. These companies are among those planned in the Premier Lesage take-over plan.

To further embarrass Power Corporation with cash riches, its biggest single investment, Canadian Oil Companies Ltd. is liable to be sold in what could be the biggest industrial merger in Canada for several years.

At the present market value of Canadian Oils, the Power Corporation investment in that company is probably about $30,000,000.

In market circles the rumor is strong that at least two leading oil companies are battling for possession of Canadian Oils, and that the bid for the company when it is made will probably be something near to $50 a share. (A few weeks ago an offer of $28 a share was rejected).

If all these mergers happen, Power Corporation could find itself with something over $55,000,000 in cash.

Shareholders of the company ask what Power Corporation will do with such a sum. It's a secret but it places the company in a favorable position to take action that could be of great importance to the Canadian economy.

One thing is certain Power Corporation can no longer specialize in the electric utilities field, for that is fast disappearing out of private ownership. It will have to look elsewhere.

Some clue as to future intentions could be gleaned from Power Corporation's most recent acquisitions.

It now controls Capital Management Ltd. which manages the All-Canadian mutual funds, and it has become a major holder in Laurentide Financial Corp.

It is also a big shareholder in Trans-Canada Pipe, Bathurst Power and Paper, East Kootenay Power, International Utilities, Quebec Natural Gas and the Royal Bank of Canada.

It Looks Like Frame-Up

Oil from Tar Sands Due by Late 1966?

TORONTO (CP)—Oil should be flowing from the Alberta tar sands by late 1966 if there are no hitches, Donald J. Wilkins, president of Great Canadian Oil Sands Limited, reports.

He was commenting on Alberta Oil and Gas Conservation Board's recommendation that his firm should develop the area.

"We've been working toward this since 1955," and added:

GOVERNMENT APPROVAL

He thought Alberta government will approve the board's recommendation.

Great Canadian Oil Sands, a Dominion incorporation of 1954, is controlled by Fry and Company, a Toronto financial house.

TO THE STATES

Eastern Canada refineries of Canadian Oil Companies Limited and Sun Oil Company Limited, a subsidiary of Sun Oil Company of Philadelphia, would receive oil from the sands, Mr. Wilkins said.

A 51 per cent interest in Great Canadian Oil Sands is shared equally by Canadian Oil Companies, Sun Oil and Canadian Pacific Oil and Gas Limited, a Canadian Pacific Railways subsidiary.

Disturbing Rift Appears Between Pound, Dollar

By HAROLD MORRISON

WASHINGTON (CP) — A five-day world monetary conference has opened a disturbing rift between Britain and the U.S. on the burdens their currencies should bear in financing future world trade and aid.

The U.S., anxious to shore up its dwindling gold reserves, appears to be moving toward reduction of American dollars flowing around the world.

FUTURE STRAIN

Britain wants to expand the world flow of all acceptable currencies to prevent a future strain on sterling.

Reginald Maudling, Britain's chancellor of the exchequer, called for a study of a radical new international bank in which accounts would be fully backed by gold.

NEW QUESTIONS

U.S. Treasury Secretary Dillon hurriedly attempted to squelch the idea, apparently feeling it may raise new questions about the strength of the dollar in terms of gold. But he admitted the idea has not died.

The British idea was the main subject of corridor talk as the 82-country conference ended annual deliberations Friday, satisfied there is enough money around the world to finance present trade.

BRITISH FORD'S NEW CONSUL CORTINA

* * * * * *

Consul Cortina Small Gem

By J. T. JONES

Now it can be told—the little British Ford surprise that we found at Westwood the week before last was called the Consul Cortina, and a small gem it is, too.

For those who just came in, the Cortina was one of the cars Ford Motor Co. turned the press loose in at the mainland road-racing circuit. It was the hit of the show, but not right away.

The lineup to try it developed after one driver started a lap behind all the big cars and finished ahead of them, much to everybody's amazement.

With 53½ horsepower an low 1,774-pound curb weight, the Cortina nips right along, making good use of its four-speed, all-synchromesh transmission.

It handles, too—beautifully. As nearly as I could determine (which I think was pretty close) its steering characteristics are so close to neutral that a very slight fiddling with tire pressures would produce the ideal. Which means that all four wheels have almost exactly the same grip on the road. Which means the car has no dirty tricks up its sleeve and should be extremely safe under any reasonable conditions.

The ride appeared to be gentle but firm, although the road surfaces available were so uniformly smooth that it wasn't feasible to find out how the Cortina would behave in rough going. I'd give it the benefit of such doubt as there is.

These riding and handling qualities are achieved with the thoroughly familiar British Ford suspension: solid axle and leaf springs at the rear, and sliding pillars guided by single lower wishbones at the front, with coil springs.

The engine is a slightly larger version of the Anglia unit, which has turned into a kind of Blighty Corvette, widely modified for racing. It can well claim to be the world's finest, sturdiest and most efficient small-production engine.

The transmission is a quick-shifting unit that has rather too wide a gap between its second and third ratios, but otherwise is hard to fault.

I'm here to testify it can stand abuse—I missed a downshift very noisily with it (with a Ford man aboard, yet) and it didn't dump its teeth all over the track as I thought for a moment it might.

Brakes are large and effective and gave no trouble whatever under extremely hard use. They brought the car down firmly and in a straight line from high speeds again and again.

The accompanying picture will have already given a fair idea of the Cortina's styling, but I'll add that it looks good from all angles.

Seats are roomy and comfortable, and there's plenty of legroom and headroom for a six-footer-plus. Noise level is low, finish is excellent, such decoration as there is is tasteful.

Let's talk REAL ESTATE

By Jack Mears, F.R.I., R.I. (B.C.)

When is the best time to sell a home? This is a question I am often asked and the answer is so easy to give. The best time to sell a home is when it no longer meets your requirements. Conversely the best time to buy a home or another home is when you need one.

It is no good waiting for a spring, summer or fall market that may or may not materialize.

There is always a market for homes. If you need a home today the time to buy is now. The benefits of home ownership are much greater than any market fluctuations. If you have the need of a home, today's price is far better than reluctant ownership of an article which has outgrown its usefulness. Homes are more than concrete, stucco, frame and plaster. They are amenities which are designed to be used. Homes are built for people, not people for homes.

Whilst there are peak times for sales, noticeably in the spring and fall, homes are being sold all the year round and one of the reasons for lower sales in other periods is the lack of available homes for sale at current market prices. Right now having had a good fall market we are particularly short of 3 and 4-bedroom homes in South Oak Bay. We could use quite a number both for early occupancy and also for delayed occupancy. India Seeks Peace Talks But Resents Red Attacks

PARIS (CP)—Premier Nehru said India has proposed preliminary negotiations with Communist China to ease border tensions, but "we cannot negotiate while daily aggressions occur."

Nehru is visiting France following the Commonwealth prime ministers' meeting in London.

"China has always tended to be aggressive when she was strong. When she was weak, she was quiet, but never withdrew her claims. We realize that a conflict with China would be disastrous for both countries.

Tenders Close

Bids Below Estimates On Airport Terminal

Tenders received on Patricia Bay airport construction are well below estimates, Esquimalt-Saanich MP George Chatterton anounced last night.

Mr. Chatterton also noted that the bids were all very close. "This is most unusual," he said. "The architect is to be commended."

Architect for the $700,000 terminal building and control tower is John Wade of Wade, Stockdill and Armour of Victoria.

Deadline for bids was Sept. 18. It will take from three weeks to a month to assess them, Mr. Chatterton said.

"At least 12 sets of specifications were taken out," he added. "Quite a few Victoria and Vancouver firms are bidding."

SMALLER AIRPORT

The new airport building will be smaller than the one originally planned but will be built so that additions to it can be made. Architect Wade considers it to be more attractive than the first design, according to Mr. Chatterton.

NEW LOCATION

The control tower will now be located between the present TCA and Department of Transport hangars. It was to have been built at the corner of Willingdon and Creswell where the new terminal building will be.

This plan had to be changed because Fairey Aviation Ltd. bought the D.O.T. hangar and raised the roof to accommodate larger planes. The new roof would have obscured the runway from the tower.

He returns to public life "on the condition that I won't be interfered with by such hooliganism."

ADMIRAL APOLOGIZES

"I want the opposition to come out—but only to argue," said Mr. Scott.

Allergy to Cough Pills Puts Girl in Trance

VANCOUVER (CP)—An overdose of cough medicine Friday sent a young girl into a trance-like state.

An inhalator crew called by her father administered anti-shock treatment to the girl before she was taken to hospital.

In fair condition Saturday, but still lapsing into unconsciousness, was Wendy Low, 11.

A hospital official said the illness was caused by a rare allergy to the procterperaline pills she was taking for a cough.

Police believe the girl, alone at home for much of the day, took a few extra pills above the recommended number, not knowing of her allergy.

New Research Field

Study of Retarded Far from Detached

By BILL W. DEAN

OMAHA, Neb. (AP)—White-coated Joe Carver is in the basement with his rats.

He's interested in their brains . . . their brains and some bone-white, musty-smelling powder in a little bottle.

What's he up to?

Ask that unscientific question of Dr. Michael J. Carver (everyone calls him Joe) and you get a peek into one of the new worlds of research: the complex, little-explored problems of retarded children.

His rats-and-powder project concerns a particular group of these children. They have phenylketonuria—a name shortened to PKU.

A PKU child is born as bright as the next one. But his first mouthful of food starts him on the road to mental retardation.

NOT DETACHED

Dr. Carver, 38, is chief of bio-chemistry at the Nebraska Psychiatric Institute and an associate professor in the University of Nebraska College of Medicine.

A father of three children, his attitude toward the retarded child is anything but cool, scientific detachment. Joe Carver admits he's emotionally involved.

"I guess it's because I've discovered I know so many people with retarded children," he says.

ONE IN 20,000

Before his work took him into the field, Carver had no idea there were so many. It's estimated 125,000 retarded children are born each year in the United States. One out of every 20,000 live births is believed to be a victim of PKU.

One important distinction sets apart all PKU from most retarded children.

"In only a small percentage of mentally retarded children can you put your finger on what is wrong with them," says Dr. Carver. "This is a case where you can." It is a metabolic flaw.

CAN BE DONE

What's more, something can be done in some cases to stop the ravages of PKU in its early stages.

On a shelf in Carver's lab is a little bottle labelled "phenylalamine." In it is the musty-smelling powder Dr. Carver feeds his rats.

SINNER TOO

Phenylalamine is one of 20-odd amino acids, the so-called building blocks of life. Eight amino acids are essential to man. Phenylalamine is one.

The fact that it is a sinner as well as saint was discovered about 30 years ago by a Swedish chemist. He put his finger on it as a trouble-maker in PKU.

Research has shown that in victims of PKU, phenylalamine—which is found in all protein foods and is abundant in many such as milk—is not handled properly. Instead of being transformed into an asset, phenylalamine collects in the body because of a missing enzyme.

OBVIOUS REMEDY

One obvious remedy is to cut phenylalamine intake by PKU victims.

This can be done with a special diet maintaining a bare subsistence level of phenylalamine. But, while it is possible to put the finger on the missing enzyme that permits accumulation of excess phenylalamine, this leaves still unsolved exactly how the brain is damaged.

STILL PROBING

By phenylalamine itself? By the lack of something that decreases as phenylalamine increases? Or by some undiscovered complication?

Dr. Carver with his rats and other researchers continue to probe the secrets of phenylalamine and PKU.

Set for Kinsmen's Fair

Excitement Keynote For Sports Centre

An air of excitement hangs over the Esquimalt Municipal Sports Centre where last-minute preparations are being made for the Kinsmen's Fall Fair which opens tomorrow at 10 a.m.

The tents are up, ready for 150 goat entries, ready for chickens, rabbits, 3,400 horticultural entries, 700 hobby displays. Caged birds, root crops, Indian craft, needlework, paintings—they'll all be there in competition. And so will cattle, sheep and swine.

The 18 rides are up, ferris wheel, parachute, tilt-a-wheel and octopus. And if these don't make you dizzy, try the roto-plane. The biggest ride of all, the Jaycopter, soars 90 feet above the fair grounds in simulated helicopter flight.

For a ride closer to the ground there is a go-kart track.

A hole-in-one contest plus 25 games of chance should appeal to the gambling heart. Fashion shows and hair styling will attract the ladies.

The Show-biz angle will be supplied by four daily stage shows, starting at 2:45 p.m. Accordionist Dick Contino and his trio and Baron Buika, comic violinist with an eight-piece orchestra, will provide the entertainment.

Mysterious crates were being unloaded from a van yesterday afternoon. Marked "Project Mercury," they contained parts for the space capsule which will be on display all day tomorrow.

The U.S. government is supplying the services of two men to explain the exhibit to the public. Several up-Island schools and the Navy are sending bus loads of students to see the capsule. A smaller replica will replace the life-size one after the first day.

The fair will be on all week. There will be ample parking, shuttle buses from the lower Naden parking lot on Admirals Road, special buses from downtown.

There will be prizes, prizes, prizes.

And don't forget the food. Barbecued salmon.

And barbecued buffalo. Yes.

Outlaws Move Government

LUSAKA, Northern Rhodesia (AP) — Joshua Nkomo, Southern Rhodesia's African nationalist leader, announced Saturday he had formed a "government in exile" for Southern Rhodesia in Tanganyika.

Nkomo said he did this after Southern Rhodesia's white government headed by Prime Minister Sir Edgar Whitehead officially outlawed ZAPU Thursday.

Fire-Bomb Threat

Salisbury's Whites Buying Up Weapons

SALISBURY, Southern Rhodesia (UPI)—The official firearms registery Saturday reported gun sales to Europeans in Salisbury, Southern Rhodesia have doubled in the last 10 days.

The rush by Europeans to arm themselves followed the first fire bombings of European homes in this British colony.

The first attack destroyed part of a farm south of Salisbury, the second landed beside a sleeping six-year-old boy but failed to explode. The third attack destroyed the future home of a young man and his bride-to-be.

Officials say women are buying sidearms—illegal for men to wear—and their menfolk are buying all the rifles, shotguns and ammunition the law allows.

ARSONISTS HUNTED

Meanwhile, in the south-eastern Melsetter area, paratroops who dropped Friday are searching for arsonists who terrorized the area for weeks.

The most recent sabotage was the burning of 500 acres of pine on a European's 25,000-acre estate.

Small jib staysail can be seen behind spinnaker of Weatherly as U.S. 12-metre sloop crosses finish line just 26 seconds ahead of Australia's Gretel in America's Cup challenge race off Newport, R.I., Saturday. U.S. leads best-of-seven series, 3-1. — (AP Photofax.)

Weatherly—by 26 Seconds

By WILL GRIMSLEY

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — Defender Weatherly stood off a dramatic closing surge by Gretel and narrowly beat the gallant Australian challenger Saturday by 26 seconds — the closest America's Cup finish in history—for a 3-1 lead in the series.

A floating gallery of about 800 craft saw Weatherly's canny skipper, Emil (Bus) Mosbacher send his blue-hulled queen of sea racers into a 340-yard lead on the opening eight-mile beat into the wind, then call on all his sailing wizardry to withstand a strong Gretel challenge on the final two legs of the 24-mile triangle.

Gretel, handled masterfully by 46-year-old Jock Sturrock, chopped Weatherly's commanding lead in half on the second eight-mile lap—a beam reach across the southerly wind under spinnaker headsails — and almost caught the American sloop on the final leg.

The first 40 minutes of the race, in moderate winds, provided a thrilling bow-to-bow duel. Then Mosbacher moved Weatherly to the front. Pointing higher toward the wind and going faster, the U.S. sloop turned the first weather mark with a lead of 1 minute, 26 seconds.

Sturrock cut the lead on the second leg — a beam reach across the wind with colorful spinnakers flying, and then engaged Weatherly in a stirring war of tactics over the final eight-mile stretch.

The pulsating finish brought an ear-shattering roar of cheers, whistles and horn blasts of tribute from the spectator fleet.

Now Weatherly needs only to capture the fifth race Tuesday to insure continued possession of the bottomless old pitcher—symbolic of world yacht racing supremacy — won by America 111 years ago and never budged by 17 challengers who preceded Australia.

Sandown Park's Biggest Day —Betting, Track Records Fall

By JIM TANG

Desert Fire returned to Sandown Park on a record-breaking day yesterday and promptly showed that he is here to defend the horse-of-the-meet honors he won last year.

The eight-year-old gelding made his first Sandown start of the season in the featured Times Handicap against a fine field and not only won as he pleased but cut almost two seconds off the track record for the mile and 70 yards set by Severance on Oct. 1, 1960.

Running easily in fifth place, about five lengths off the pace, most of the way, Desert Fire wasn't asked to move by jockey George Miller until the field headed for home. He just shifted into high and won going away by almost three lengths.

The time of 1:14 2-5 was one and four-fifths second better than the previous best time for the distance at Sandown and made the $4.70 straight payoff look like an overlay.

But Desert Fire had to share the spotlight with a four-year-old filly and 5,287 bettors who jammed the mutuel windows to set a new single-day betting record for Sandown.

Ky Look, facing what was the best field of sprinters ever assembled for one race at Sandown, proved what those who knew about breeding had been saying by taking the invitational handicap that was the sixth race and setting a track standard for the six furlongs.

Starting on the outside of the seven-horse field was no handicap at all for the Kentucky-bred filly. Jockey Charlie Ulrich asked her for speed at the break. She gave it to get to the front and was in front by four clear lengths at the finish.

Catching Milady Pleases near the finish but making no impression on the winner was Rebel Lea while Turk's Boy, also moving in the stretch just missed getting show money.

PUSHES LEADER

Milady Pleases, who lost her track record of 1:11 3-5, pushed Ky. Look until they came out of the backstretch to help the winner cut a fifth of a second off her mark.

It was the kind of racing, and on a perfect day for racing, which deserved support. And it got it. With favorites winning five races, including the second, third and fourth, and getting in the money in the other three events, it created perfect conditions for the mutuels.

LONG LINEUPS

And they hummed, with long lineups for every race. When the adding up was done, the $135,734 bet yesterday was about a $1,000 more than was bet on Thanksgiving Day, 1960 and $7,370 more than was bet on the same day a year ago.

Only Ky. Look, an overlay as too many punters took into account her first start at Sandown. In the Colonist Handicap over a mile last Saturday, and the No. 7 pole position, and Pay Hike managed to post double-figure win returns on the board.

Ky. Look returned $10.70 while Pay Hike, who came from last place in the last three furlongs to win by about an inch over pace-setting Eastern Scout in the 11-furlong marathon paid $16.10.

Roc and Noc, Silver Mint, Somedrive and the odds-on Lavendel joined Desert Fire as winning favorites. Tomander was beaten a head in the first race, Hasty Hawk in the marathon and Milady Pleases in the sprint feature finished third.

Lions' Playoff Hopes Dim After 26-14 Loss to Riders

REGINA — Playing almost brilliantly on occasion, but not often enough to make up for their many lapses, B.C. Lions had their Western Conference playoff hopes all but ended here Saturday night as they took a 26-14 beating from Saskatchewan Rough Riders in a Canadian Football League game played before 12,283 fans.

Back in their accustomed cellar position, three points behind the third-place Riders, the Lions have enough games left to easily make up the difference. But three of their seven remaining games are against Winnipeg Blue Bombers, two against the improving Edmonton Eskimos, and one each against the Riders and Calgary Stampeders.

Riders won last night by the simple method of taking full advantage of the many B.C. miscues, mental and physical.

They scored two converted touchdowns in the first half of the first quarter. The first came in three plays after Tom Larscheid fumbled after running five yards to the Lions' 27-yard line on the first play from scrimmage. The second came after Bob Schloredt made a bad punt — only 24 yards — from inside his end zone, and the Lions were penalized 15 yards for not giving the receiver the stipulated minimum of five yards.

Ray Purdin, plunging for 10 and four yards, got the touchdowns and Reg Whitehouse converted.

For the rest of the first half and the early minutes of the third quarter, the Lions played outstanding football. They tied it at 14-14 before half-time on a 59-yard touchdown play between Joe Kapp and Mack Burton and a 56-yard march which took eight plays and ended with Nub Beamer crashing for the last two yards.

Taking the kickoff to start the second half, the Lions got within 20 yards in a drive which saw Kapp keep the Rider defence off balance with a good assortment of plays. Then Grant had a field-goal try blocked for the second time in the game, the Riders dribbled the ball almost to midfield.

Riders settled for a single point but got the ball back two plays later as Gene Wlasiuk intercepted on the B.C. 40-yard line. The Riders made it with two passes around an eight-yard loss, the last a 28-yarder from Bob Ptacek to Bill Gray in the end zone.

Whitehouse converted to make it 22-14, and the Lions were through. Schloredt got two more short punts away, the Lions were again penalized for no yards on one of them and while the defensive team performed nobly, Kapp couldn't get his big offence rolling again.

Unsigned and somewhat undecided, Doug Harvey arrived at New York Ranger's training camp in Vancouver yesterday saying he will play this season "only if I can help the club. Otherwise I'll go home." Harvey may be in lineup when Rangers play Portland Buckaroos Monday at 8:30 at Memorial Arena.

Alouettes Tie With Esks

MONTREAL — Montreal Alouettes returned two kicks from their own end zone in the final seconds here yesterday to earn an 18-18 tie with Edmonton Eskimos in their interlocking Canadian Football League game before 19,120 fans.

Tommy-Joe Coffey had two good shots at winning it for the Esks in what was about the only exciting minute in one of the season's dullest games.

With 40 seconds left, Coffey punted from the Alouette 20-yard line. Als' Larry Hickman booted it back, but Montreal was called for no yards on the receiver and Coffey got another chance from the 13-yard line. Even then he couldn't make it as Paul Fedor just managed to dribble a bouncing kick out of the end zone as the final gun sounded.

Yanks, Dodgers, Too Back Towards Series

New York Yankees are backing into a world series almost as fast as they used to sprint their way there.

Looking anything but champions to be, the Yankees again gained ground by losing yesterday as they reached the stage where two wins in their final six games, two Minnesota defeats or one win and a Minnesota loss would clinch.

The American League champions were again upended by Chicago White Sox, who had two late three-run innings in a 6-2 win. But Minnesota lost again and Los Angeles are already out of it and thinking about the chance that was theirs.

Since Aug. 23, when the Yankees appeared to have clinched matters with a second straight win over the Angels, the champions have won 13 games and lost 14. But the Twins are also 15-14 for the same period and the Angels no better than 12-15.

Nor have the Los Angeles Dodgers, the almost certain world series opponents for the Yankees, looked much better.

In the last six weeks the Dodgers have done no better than 21-18, no pennant-winning pace, but the San Francisco Giants missed their chance, too, by only gaining a game and a half.

They dropped four games back yesterday when Houston Colts scored two ninth-inning runs to win, 6-5. The Dodgers moved within four victories of clinching by taking St. Louis Cardinals, 4-1.

Cincinnati Reds were beaten 5-1 by Philadelphia Phillies, the hottest club in either league for the past five weeks. The defeat officially eliminated the defending champions from the National League race.

Patterson and Liston Settle Feud Tuesday

CHICAGO (AP)—The world heavyweight boxing title match, into which champion Floyd Patterson was goaded by ominous challenger Charles (Sonny) Liston, flares into a $5,000,000 production in Comiskey Park Tuesday night.

The White Sox ball yard is more a studio setting for a $4,000,000 closed circuit television display of underdog Patterson's 15-round defence against the once-defeated and heavier Liston.

The intriguing boxer vs. slugger bout is scheduled for 7:30 p.m., PDT, with a "live" park audience of perhaps 30,000 to 35,000.

For those in the United States and Canada not shelling out between $4 and $10 a seat at upwards of 270 closed circuit TV outlets, the fight will be broadcast nationally over the ABC radio network in the U.S. and over the trans-Canada network of the CBC.

A record 620 working newspaper men requested seats from the sponsoring Championship Sports, Incorporated.

Liston, expected to weigh around 212, is rated an early 7-to-5 favorite over the 189-pound Patterson, making a third defence since regaining the title in the middle match of an epic three-bout series with Sweden's Ingemar Johansson.

HIS BIG ONE

The odds may slim down by Tuesday's official noon weigh-in time, but the feeling generally is that Patterson, decked by far less potent punchers than Liston, will have to unleash the fight of his life to conquer the challenger. Against Johansson alone, Patterson was down a total of nine times in their three knockout-ending bouts.

Embittered by publicity over his prison past and what he claims is a beggar's (12½ per cent) share of the rich fight receipts, Liston will be as dedicated a fighter as Patterson Tuesday night.

YEAR OLDER

The 28-year-old Liston, a year older than Patterson and owning better than a six-inch reach over the lighter champion, probably has the most jolting left jab since Joe Louis. He lacks the combination punching finesse of Patterson, but can hurt as much with his right hand.

Liston taunted Patterson into this title match, claiming the champion was running away from him and using Liston's prison record as an excuse not to fight him.

The decision may cost Patterson his title, but he will be soothed by a take of more than $1,000,000 from his 55 per cent of net ancilliary closed circuit TV, etc., receipts, and 45 per cent of the net live gate.

Also, a victorious Liston must give Patterson a return match within a year and have all except $50,000 of his purse of a minimum $200,000 held in escrow until this condition is met.

Championship Sports said in event of rain Tuesday, the closed circuit TV setup is arranged for holding the bout Wednesday or Thursday.

OUTDOORS

with Alec Merriman

Look for the jumping coho and then fish where you find them.

That is the advice of Herman Mayea, who has fished Cowichan Bay for 40 years, during which time he has caught thousands of coho and springs . . . biggest a 47:5-pound spring on a Wonder 7 spoon and a 23:8 coho on Cowichan spoon.

He says coho bite when they jump, but springs are better fishing when they don't show.

He proved his methods to us Friday when we hooked into seven coho, landed five and had several other strikes . . . all on bucktail and all within half a mile of Cherry Point.

At this time of year when the coho are just starting to appear Mayea does his searching for jumpers in a square course from the Cowichan Bay floats to Separation Point, across to Musgrave Point on the tip of Salt Spring, to Cherry Point and along past Lambourn and Wilcuma.

If he doesn't see any in that course he tries inside the Bay.

That is why he likes a fast boat. He cruises at top speed along that route until he sees jumpers. Then he stops to fish for an hour at each spot he sees signs of fish. If fishing is slow he moves along the course to another sopt.

We found our first jumpers between Cherry Point and Lambourn, a little closer to Cherry Point, although Mayea had hooked into them at Separation earlier that morning. Out went the bucktails and Mayea hardly slowed down to troll. We went fast, trolling past all other boats. But it worked and within 10 minutes we felt the first tug, then another a split second after, but it wasn't on. We quickly stripped our line out a pull, letting it fall back, . . . a trick we learned from Dick James last year . . . It worked. We had it on and it was a big one.

But we lost it at the boat.

Mayea followed quickly with a fish which hit as he was letting his deep blue and white long bucktail and pearl spinner out. He got it, and another soon afterwards. Then Frank Baker hit into one on silver spinner and light blue bucktail.

We hit into three others of Cherry Point and one of them broke our eight-pound test leader and got away with our lucky deep blue fly and silver spinner.

We found the bites about 3 p.m. and again at 6 p.m.

We didn't see another boat land a coho, so it must have been Mayea's idea of fast bucktailing that pays off.

He finds that a small pearl pink plug or Strip-Teaser works well trolled at the same speed as bucktail. Coho are fast fish. Make the lures just dance along, he says.

Use the bucktails when the water is choppy or riffly, he says. If it is calm you are better off to use bait or lure, and from two to six ounces of weight.

He used five feet of 10-pound test leader, a small split shot to keep the spinner under water at fast speeds, a small pearl spinner and one of those extra long bucktails, which work so well at Cowichan Bay.

He uses between 60 and 75 feet of line.

"When a fish grabs your fly when you are going fast, you are almost sure of hooking it. If you are going slow, the fish can get rid of your fly," he says.

For coho watch for movement and fish around that spot, he says. Watch for fish finning. Watch for where tide eddies meet and for smooth patches of water. Fish just along these "markers" because that is where the feed gangs up and the salmon feed.

He advises anglers to make sure their rods are held securely. He has lost two overboard to big coho strikes.

The coho are just starting to show at Cowichan Bay and should hit into their peak in October.

Coho have their times to bite. You can fish for two hours and then, all of a sudden, they hit like mad, he says. "That is the time to catch them as fast as you can and to keep your line in the water as much as you can."

Don't let your fly roll. It must stay flat in the water, the blue or other color up, and white down. "Coho will never touch it, if it rolls," he says. Swivels between leader and main line help take out the roll.

Mayea fishes salmon about 7½ months of the year and steelhead and trout, the rest of the year. He believes mooching for spring salmon is more sporting than trolling with wire lines and planers and he is one of a very few who fishes the lower part of the Cowichan River by boat. He sometimes cruises by fast riverboat from the river mouth all the way up to the Riverbottom picnic grounds, some seven miles.

Veteran Wins Wire to Wire

ORONO, Ont., (CP)—Masten Gregory, an American racing veteran who lives in France, Saturday won the Canadian Grand Prix at Mosport track near Toronto.

Driving a Lotus 19, he took the lead from the beginning and was never headed.

Second in the 250-mile race was Mexico's Pedro Rodriguez in a Ferrari.

The last half-dozen laps of the race constituted a duel between Rodriguez and Francis Bradley, a Toronto bus driver driving a Lotus 19.

Bradley finished third but his showing gave him enough points to become the top Canadian driver of the year.

Situation 'Grim' For KO'd Boxer

LOS ANGELES (AP)—"The fighter's situation is very grim."

So said a neurosurgeon Saturday after performing a four-hour brain operation on handsome Argentine heavyweight Alejandro Lavorante, knocked out by underdog Johnny Riggins in the sixth round of a scheduled 10-round fight Friday night.

The 6-foot-4, 212-pound Lavorante can survive, Dr. J. DeWitt Fox added, but: "It is up to him now."

"Lavo," unconscious since the knockout at 10:20 p.m., is not expected to regain consciousness for 24 to 48 hours after the surgery. Only then will it be known whether he suffered permanent brain damage. California hospital announced his condition as "serious to critical."

Bleeding was stopped at three points where it was found in the delicate operation. Dr. Fox said he noted stiffness in the fighter's arms and legs, but he refused to speculate on the possibility of permanent paralysis. Lavorante's temperature rose to 105 degrees during surgery but later dropped to 101.

The boxer responded to nerve stimulation before surgery, indicating there is no paralysis, said Mrs. Alleen Eaton. She and her husband, Cal, are co-promoters of boxing at Olympic auditorium, where the fight was held.

The Argentine, who now lives in Los Angeles, had outpointed Riggins until decked by a sharp right cross and a left hook to the side of the head in 2:12 of the sixth round.

Lavorante lay in his corner, his long legs quivering, his stomach heaving. A crowd of about 4,000 stood silenly. Dr. Robert Rocke of the state athletic commission tried for 10 minutes to revive the fighter. Then Lavorante was carried out on a stretcher and taken by ambulance to the hospital.

New Westminster Wins Four Straight

Mann Cup Stays Out West

BRAMPTON, Ont. (CP)—New Westminster, long a stronghold of lacrosse in Western Canada, wrapped up another Mann Cup Saturday night, beating Brampton Ramblers 10-6 to take the best-of-seven series for the Canadian senior lacrosse championship four straight. Vancouver was the defending champion.

Ramblers, badly outplayed in the three previous games, showed more finesse in the fourth contest, but just couldn't match New Westminster's class.

Jack Bionda, former National Hockey League defenceman and conceded to be Canada's greatest lacrosse player, scored seven points for the westerners with four goals and three assists.

His performance won him the Mike Kelly Memorial medal, presented annually to the outstanding performer in lacrosse's Mann Cup series.

Ramblers led twice, the first time they were ahead of the westerners in the entire series.

Other New Westminster scorers were Johnny Cervi, with three, and Bill Jobb, Bobby Allan and Doug McRory with one apiece.

For Brampton, Bob Dobbie was a standout until injured in the second period. He scored two goals. He had to leave the game when he injured his shoulder on a drive towards the net. Barry Ashbee, Wayne [illegible]son, Bert Naylor and John Ward scored one goal each for Ramblers.

Bionda scored eight goals and eight assists in the final three games of the series, after being held scoreless in the first game. The 195-pound native of Huntsville, Ont. became a double winner of the Mike Kelly award. He was chosen the most valuable player in 1959 when New Westminster won the Mann Cup.

Brampton played a much smarter game Saturday night using trick work rather than rough play. The first period ended in a 3-3 tie and Brampton thrilled the home-town crowd of 1,600 by taking a 5-4 lead in the second period.

But two penalties led to their downfall. George Thompson and Bill Castator went to the penalty box only 16 seconds apart. The effective New Westminster power play took over and Bionda tied it up and passed to Allan to give New Westminster the lead it never relinquished.

It was only the second time in history that a Western team has won the Mann Cup in an eastern series. Nanaimo did it in 1956. Allan and Doug McRory had the distinction of playing on both teams.

Ex-Marine Wins on Speed

BOSTON (AP) — Seventh-ranked welterweight Bob Fosmire pitted his quickness and slashing left hand against Gaspar Ortega's experience and came out with a unanimous 10-round decision Saturday night at Boston arena.

It was the 27-year-old ex-marine's 18th straight pro victory without a loss. For the veteran Ortega, it brought his record to 83-23-1.

REBEL LEA was up in good position all the way and made up ground through final quarter to be second. MILADY PLEASES broke fast, was outrun by winner in early stages and tired in stretch run as if short. TURK'S BOY was too far out of the early running and although making up some ground in last part did not menace leaders. MINSTREL MAN was closing well. MONDAY'S IMAGE could not move up in last part. Wolves Win, 3-2

LONDON (AP) — Centre forward Peter McParland scored two goals late in the second half Saturday and sparked the English Soccer League leaders, Wolverhampton Wanderers, to a 3-2 victory over defending champion Ipswich.

McParland, normally a winger or inside forward, stepped in for Wolves' injured centre forward Ted Farmer.

HELD LEAD

Ipswich, England's representatives in the European Cup, led 2-1 at halftime and held that lead over the powerful Wolves until the 80th minute. Then McParland struck with his first goal and a minute later had another to give Wolves the victory.

The Wolves lead Division I standings with 17 points—two points ahead of second-place Everton. Notts Forest is third with 14 points.

STILL UNDEFEATED

The Wolves remain the only undefeated team in Division I.

A crowd of 73,000, the biggest of the day, turned out for the clash of Everton and Liverpool, next-door neighbors in a soccer-mad area.

A last-minute goal by Roger Hunt earned Liverpool a 2-2 draw and robbed Everton of its 100-per-cent home record.

Notts Forest stayed in the championship race by defeating Aston Villa 3-1. Forest led 1-0 at half time, went ahead 2-1 on a goal by Geoff Vowden and then had another one by Vowden disallowed for offside. Villa scored through Harry Burrows on a penalty, but straight from the restart Dick Le Flem got Notts Forest's third goal.

DEFEATS 'SPURS

Sheffield United halted Tottenham Hotspur, the English Cup holders, at Sheffield. United won 3-1 on a first-half goal from inside left Bill Hodgson and two in the second half from right winger Len Allchurch and inside right Ken Kettleborough. Spurs' only goal came in the 56th minute from inside forward Jimmy Greaves.

He Has Rocks in His Head —And So Have Customers

Multiple thunder egg from Oregon, of volcanic origin, is polished to high lustre.

By JURGEN HESSE

He's got rocks in his head all the time and so have hundreds of visitors who come to see him—talking rocks, swapping rocks, buying rocks.

Some of these rocks have a rough exterior and are incredibly beautiful on the inside. Some glitter, some are shaped in weird forms, some show promising streaks of color and others look quite ordinary, making you wonder what people see in them.

Rocks on shelves, whole, broken up, cut in thin slivers or polished until they look like precious gems . . .

Rocks harder than armor steel, rocks you can scratch with the point of your penknife, rocks with intricate designs like fragile Japanese paintings, rock with year rings, rocks with rough or smooth texture . . .

And amidst this stunning array of minerals stands a slightly built man, 65 years old, wearing a hat all the time like Andy Capp of the famous British cartoon — Harold Agusta Scanlon.

He owns Victoria's Rockhound Shop on Hillside Avenue, where rockhounds may equip themselves with nearly everything a weekend or full-time prospector needs, or where society ladies may buy intricate jewelry made from semi-precious stones.

Mr. Scanlon looks and talks like an oldtimer—which is exactly what he is.

He's not a polished, high-pressure salesman, rather a mixture of weatherbeaten prospector and retired outdoorsman.

How does he fare in his offbeat venture?

"Well, I'm not making a fortune, but I'm having a lot of fun doing all this," he says.

The real fun for Mr. Scanlon comes in when he drives his transporter all over the northwest or even further south, looking for new rocks he wants to sell or convert to little trinkets.

In addition he imports rocks from Brazil, Mexico, Arizona, Nevada, Montana, Idaho and many other states.

The Rockhound Shop is the delight of youngsters who constantly browse around, hunting for colorful specimens, and for serious adults who have been bitten by the rock bug.

"I have people coming in from all over the world," Mr. Scanlon says proudly. "Some bring me rocks for trading, or want to sell me what I don't have yet."

"Look at this," he says, picking up a small glass phial containing hundreds, perhaps thousands, of little maroon pebbles glistening in the afternoon sun.

They are garnets, tiny, semi-precious stones, extremely hard. It takes several months to tumble them until they acquire the exquisite lustre.

How did Harold Scanlon get to be a rockhound?

He was born in Quebec, fought against the Germans in Flanders in the First World War, was disabled in 1916, returned to Canada, spent five years in a hospital, did some farming afterward, attended several mining schools, did years of prospecting in northern Ontario, learned woodcraft, came to B.C. in 1942 and worked in a shipyard here until 1959.

What started him in his rock business was a trip back East where he picked up some agates at Yellowstone River. Soon his rock hobby developed into a business.

His selling line ranges from rough rocks in chunks of 100 pounds down to pieces of jewelry. On the side he sells self-carved totem poles.

Mr. Scanlon learned totem pole carving from the Kwakiutl and Nimkish at Alert Bay.

But what he still enjoys most of all is making jewelry from semi-precious stones. The store contains several machines just for that purpose.

From rough rocks he saws slivers, polishes them, trims them to size, rounds the edges and mounts them as brooches, rings or pendants.

"I get a big kick out of doing this," he says. "There is no end to what you can do with these stones."

The well-stocked display cases prove his point.

Mr. Scanlon considers the store and his work a paying hobby. And soon he'll go on another rock-hunting trip south, combining pleasure and business as he loads rocks of all shapes and sizes into his transporter.

Ayub's Farewell

Pakistani Visitor Tops Exotic Meal With Ice Cream

OTTAWA (UPI) — An exotic native banquet topped with strawberry ice cream was Pakistani President Ayub Khan's farewell gesture to the capital last night.

Ayub was host at a state dinner for 84, held at the fashionable Country Club. Among the guests were Prime Minister John Diefenbaker and Governor-General George Vanier, members of parliament and the diplomatic corps.

COLORFUL MENU

Ayub greeted the guests in the same formal Pakistani attire he wore the previous evening to Vanier's state dinner—a black sherwani and shalwar, or long coat buttoned to the neck and loose trousers which are his country's national dress.

In spite of eye-catching saris worn by the Pakistan women, the menu itself was the most colorful part of the occasion.

The guests began with consomme and shrimp salad and then launched into the spicy Pakistani dishes. These included biryani (rice and meat), murgh korma (chicken curry), shami kabab (mutton) and pasanda (a meat preparation usually made with lamb).

And the whole meal was topped off by a strawberry ice cream!

It the end of two hectic days in Ottawa where Ayub was not known previously. But the president had built up a solid reputation for his work since taking over Pakistan's tottering government in October, 1958.

Perhaps his detailed tour of Canada's Houses of Parliament will remain the most interest feature of the visit to the capital.

MACE EXPLAINED

Serving as guides were two of Parliament's procedural experts—Roland Michener, now a private citizen since his defeat in the June 18 election, but Speaker of the House of Commons during its last session, and Senate Speaker Mark Drouin—who immediately "hit it off" with the president.

Taking in every detail, Ayub listened closely to Michener's explanation of the gold mace which rests on the table in front of the speaker when the House is in session.

Quirkily the president quipped: "I see, if someone doesn't behave himself he is to be hit on the head," and added: "I think that is a very good idea for the defence of the speaker—with four parties in your House anything's possible."

Coldwell Prediction

Medicare for All Within 10 Years

HAMILTON, Ont. (CP) — M. J. Coldwell, honorary president of the New Democratic Party, predicted Saturday that within 10 years every Canadian will be covered by a medicare-type insurance plan.

Addressing delegates attending the first annual convention of the Ontario NDP youth, Mr. Coldwell described Saskatchewan's health insurance plan as the finest piece of legislation on the books in North America.

SABOTAGE ATTEMPTS

But, he added, attempts were being made to sabotage the pace-setting scheme in Saskatchewan.

He said that because of misrepresentation by the Liberal party and the doctors, the Saskatchewan government had made serious compromises in their new health plan. Mr. Coldwell charged that by allowing private insurance companies to participate the government had made the scheme cumbersome and private firms now were attempting to sabotage it.

MEDICARE A SUCCESS

Mr. Coldwell said the controversy had done more to bring health insurance to the public eye than anything the NDP could have done. He said the Saskatchewan medical care insurance program would succeed.

Troops Seek Arms

Emergency State Declared in Accra

ACCRA, Ghana (Reuters)—President Kwame Nkrumah Saturday declared a state of emergency in the Accra area in the wake of a series of terrorist bombings.

The announcement came as the acting Nigerian high commissioner, Leslie Harriman, complained armed police and soldiers had come to his residence and tried to search it.

APOLOGIES

Under the state of emergency public meetings were banned, police were given special powers to search houses, all processions were banned and a 6 p.m.-to-6 a.m. curfew was imposed.

Harriman said later he had received apologies about the search, which had been described as a "mistake."

Steel-helmeted police made intensive house - to - house searches for arms in many districts of the capital.

RIVAL GROUPS

Harriman said that when he refused to let the searchers in they took up position around the house.

Ghana and Nigeria belong to rival groups of African states and differ over methods of seeking African unity.

The emergency declaration said the special powers would apply only in the Accra area.

Casablanca Summit Postponed

RABAT, Morocco (AP) — A Summit conference of the Casablanca group of nations, scheduled for Oct. 15, has been postponed at the request of President Kwame Nkrumah of Ghana, who cited internal political reasons.

The Casablanca nations — Morocco, Ghana, Guinea, Mali, United Arab Republic and Algeria — were to have met in Marrakech, Morocco. No new date has been set.

Navy Appointments

Lt.-Cmdr. Michael A. Martin, left, has been appointed skipper of the Esquimalt-based frigate Ste. Therese. He has been an RCN liaison officer with the USN since 1960. Victoria-born Cmdr. Peter Cossette has been appointed director of manning, naval headquarters, Ottawa, and has been promoted to the rank of captain. He has been commanding officer, Fleet School, HMCS Hochelaga, Montreal, since 1959.

New Hopeful Note For Shipyard Jobs

A further optimistic note for shipyard employment was struck last night by Esquimalt-Saanich MP George Chatterton.

"The situation for a short period might have looked grim," he said, "but I have further indications that the government is giving consideration to the employment situation for this winter in the local shipyards."

'ENCOURAGING'

"We are not concerned over the long-term outlook. That is good. But we were concerned for the immediate future, when the B.C. government ferries and the destroyer escorts were completed."

Mr. Chatterton said he was not at liberty to divulge what the indications are but he described them as "very encouraging."

Blaze Levels Officers' Home

CHILLIWACK (CP) — The single officers' quarters hut at the Chilliwack army camp was destroyed by fire early Saturday.

Origin of the blaze was not immediately known. The camp's fire brigade, called out shortly before 2 a.m., fought the blaze for three hours before bringing it under control.

All occupants escaped safely.

Army spokesmen in Ottawa said damage to the hut was estimated at $20,000.

Toronto's Week

More Chiefs Than Firemen

TORONTO (UPI)—Toronto will have more fire chiefs than firemen for four days this week.

Some of them will be in town for the 89th annual convention of the International Association of Fire Chiefs, starting Monday.

FINISHING TOUCHES

Hundreds of the firefighters booked into hotels Saturday as convention officials put the finishing touches to displays at the Queen Elizabeth building on the Canadian National Exhibition grounds.

The chiefs get down to the business of determining the quickest and best ways to extinguish fires in sessions at the Royal York Hotel Monday.

AND 28 NATIONS

The visitors hail from all parts of Canada, the United States and 28 countries abroad. Ten are from Japan, two from England and one each from France, the Virgin Islands, Hawaii, The Philippines and Puerto Rico.

Retiring Toronto fire chief Leonard Leigh will be host to the convention.

MALARIA CONTROL

An anti-malaria campaign cut Ceylon's death rate by 55 per cent between 1946 and 1959, with a 40 per cent increase in population.

Machines Triumph As Maidens Pine

PORTSMOUTH, England (AP)—Local stenographers don't like offices where dictating machines have replaced dictating bosses. Coun. Anthony Bresler told the city's health services committee: "Offices using these machines are losing hundreds of typists because the girls don't see a man during working hours."

The committee voted to buy them.

Guinean Pact Ratified

UNITED NATIONS (CP)—The United Nations General Assembly Friday ratified the agreement under which The Netherlands will turn over its administration of West New Guinea to Indonesia, with a seven-month interim UN administration.

The date of final transfer of power to Indonesia is next May 1.

Treasures Buried for 6,000 Years

Prehistoric Museum Displays Cave-Man Art

NERJA, Spain — A prehistoric museum featuring paintings executed more than 6,000 years ago, is attracting travel adventurers to one of the world's most magnificent network of caves near this small Spanish town on the Mediterranean coast.

The works of early man were preserved for posterity one day some 60 centuries ago when the earth trembled and sent tons of rock crushing down on the entrance to the Caves of Norja.

The primitive men who lived in the caves were either trapped inside and perished or were caught outside and forever cut off from cave mates and family.

CAVES ISOLATED

The tumbling rocks did more than that. They blotted out human contact with the caves until the 20th century.

On January 12, 1959, five Spanish boys stumbled onto the long-hidden entry to the caves, and last year, after months of archaeological study which turned up major finds, including the prehistoric paintings which rank with the world's finest, the caves were thrown upen to the public.

The scientists also found stone weapons, bones belonging to long-extinct animals, and an early edition silo heaped with wheat, pottery and other material typical of primitive man's dwellings.

CAVES LIT

Now lighting has been installed in the caves and five huge halls have been opened to interested visitors.

They are the "Hall of the Elephant Tusk" where archaeologists found a fossil embedder in a wall; "The Hall of the Cascade," where giant stalactites drop from a 90-foot high dome to form a petrified waterfall; "The Hall of the Ghosts," where nature twisted stone into fantastic shapes; "The Hall of the Throne," in which thrusting stalagmites form a regal seat; and "The Hall of the Cataclysm," where order was crushed and broken by some internal upheaval.

Tourists are not permitted beyond the Hall of the Cataclysm, although the network of caves runs on for countless miles. It is there that the scientists work today.

Most beautiful section of world's most magnificent network of caves is this "Grotto of Marvels." Caves, inhabited 6,000 years ago, rediscovered in 1959, are attracting visitors from all over the world.

Novelist's Advice

If You Write Don't Read!

By JOHN CROSBY

"I have not read a novel since 1928, when I started writing them." This from George Simenon, probably the most prolific writer of our time if not of anyone else's. Perhaps that's the secret of getting so much work done—not reading anyone else's work.

"After all, there are only 30 possible situations for a play or a novel," Simenon continued. If you read enough novels, you will run across all your own plot lines and stop writing. It's a good idea never to read fiction if you write fiction."

Well, it's an interesting idea. This may be one of the reasons Simenon's characters seem so fresh, so newly minted, and so—I can think of no better word—earthy. If he's not reading other men's novels, he's not, consciously or unconsciously, swiping their stuff. He must get his material out of the fresh air, not out of books.

It seems to me there is another reason why writers shouldn't read. Mr. Simenon didn't mention it, but it may be the most important reason of all. Reading is one of the greatest excuses for not writing that has ever been invented.

Mr. Simenon is not alone in not patronizing his own muse. I know movie actors who not only wouldn't be caught dead at their own movies, they can hardly bear to go to anyone else's movies. There are television stars who are far too exhausted ever to look at television, especially their own shows.

There is the celebrated newspaper editor in London of an enormously popular and sensational daily newspaper who admitted scornfully on David Brinkley's coast-to-coast television program that he wouldn't dream of reading his own newspaper, which, he confessed, was put out for a much different and lower intelligence than his own.

I asked Mr. Simenon if he read anything at all. "My hobby is medicine," he said gaily. "I read many medical journals — the Lancet from England, French medical journals, German medical journals. Medical periodicals are about the only thing I read."

"You don't even read reviews of your own books?" I exclaimed somewhat incredulously.

"Well," said Georges, whose books are printed in about a million languages all over the world, "I'm intimidated by the sheer weight of them. We get two or three kilos a day—that's about six pounds of clippings.

"Sometimes my wife finds one and says I absolutely must read this one. So I read it. But you know, I'm too old to care what the reviewers say about me. I'll be 60 next February." (He seems 15 years younger in appearance and 35 years younger in the joy of living.)

"Everyone called Hemingway the old man. No one calls me the old man. I'm jealous."

I don't think anyone will ever call him the old man.

French Army Given New Look

PARIS (Reuters) — France's "new look" army will have 700,000 men, backed by a nuclear strike force, the armed forces ministry bulletin announced Friday.

Armed Forces Minister Pierre Messmer toured France explaining to senior officers plans to reshape the army, which numbered more than 1,000,000 men during the Algerian war.

Why?

MONTREAL (CP) — Two Cunard liners, the Saxonia and Ivernia, will be renamed after undergoing extensive alterations this winter at Clydebank, Scotland. The company announced that the Saxonia will be renamed the Carmania, and the Ivernia the Franconia.

U.S. Officials Cool To Two-K Meeting

WASHINGTON (AP) — Soviet Premier Khrushchev is reported to have hinted to foreign visitors recently that he might like to have a talk with President Kennedy on the Berlin situation late this year.

U.S. officials at present are cool to such a meeting because of the danger that sharp disagreement at the summit level would inflame East-West tensions.

COMING TO UN?

There has been persistent speculation in diplomatic quarters here that Khrushchev may decide to attend some sessions of the UN General Assembly in New York in late November. Informed diplomats now believe that if he does, his purpose will be not only to appear in the assembly but to create an opportunity for a meeting with Kennedy.

In such circumstances, it is said, the president would see Khrushchev as he might see any other government leader who came to the United Nations. But on the U.S. side nothing is being done at present to encourage Khrushchev to make the trip.

RUSK SEEING GROMYKO

State Secretary Rusk flies to New York this afternoon for a round of conferences with various foreign ministers attending the assembly. He is scheduled to see Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko Tuesday. Berlin, disarmament, and Cuba are prospective subjects of discussion.

The revived talk of a Khrushchev trip to the U.S. will be in the background of the Rusk-Gromyko meeting, but whether the Russian minister will put out any more feelers is uncertain.

Victorians Watch Simple, Moving Irish Rite, Then—

Off to Paddy's Pub to Celebrate

Canadian newspaperman, A. H. Murphy, for many years a member of the Colonist editorial staff, is on an extended visit to Ireland, his spiritual home.

By A. H. MURPHY

UNDER a sky piled high with fleecy clouds a black Galway hooker with a stained brown sail eased into shore and gently kissed the wall of Taras Pier. Helped ashore by helmsman Jim McSwiney, whose family has been sailing off the rugged Galway coast for 600 years, was Queen Neptunia, a mere slip of an Irish girl.

She was greeted by the mayors of Galway and Dublin resplendent in ermine and scarlet robes and bedecked with heavy chains of office.

At that point the season for oyster gathering began and the annual Galway Oyster Festival was underway.

Queen Neptunia, playing harp, sings song of thanksgiving for fruits of sea, accompanied by ladies of her court.

SONG OF JOY

Seated on her throne and surrounded by the nine pretty maidens of her court, Queen Neuptunia sang of her joy that the sea had been so good to Galway men. "Oro mo mhaidin," she sang accompanying herself on an ancient harp. And the voices of twenty-seven young maidens joined her in the soft September air.

The age-old language, the gentle harp and the girlish voices all contributed to an unforgettable picture and the 300-odd guests at the ceremony, including two Victorians, were genuinely touched more so because the whole rite was underplayed.

SIMPLE, STRONG

The queen was no lipsticked model but a nice, fresh-faced Galway girl who sang well and played the harp expertly. The ceremony, pagan in origin and feeling, was simple and strong.

Then the queen commanded that the fruits of the sea be brought to her. She rejected a lobster and turned away a scallop. She selected an oyster and presented it to the Mayor of Galway who ate it, with relish.

Then, to music supplied by toque and sweater-clad Aran Islanders, the girls and the mayors joined hands and unselfconsciously danced around the platform.

OYSTERS AND STOUT

Away then to Paddy Burke's pub at Clarenbridge, a few miles off. There, Paddy, who is the fourth Burke to operate the pub, had 10,000 oysters and great casks of stout ready for his guests. It was oysters and stout, brown bread and white wine, all you could eat and drink. And outside the pub guests were dancing the "Walls of Limerick" with the villagers.

There were jigs and reels and Irish ballads and the stout flowed black and strong until the sun went down over Galway Bay.

The things which made the greatest impression on the foreigner, used to the stage-managed festivals of America, were the small things: the home-made simplicity of the Galway blue and red costumes worn by the queen and her attendants; the fact that the queen was a truly talented girl who played the harp and sang well, and the merry, noisy and well-mannered children who swarmed all over the place having a wonderful time.

AMATEUR TALENT

Paddy Burke's was good fun. After a few hours, the bards and soothsayers, amateurs all, took over the scheduled entertainers and often excelled them in talent. Bursts of song would break out all over the place.

There were English, French, American, German, Malayan, East Indian, African and Canadian guests at the Galway Oyster Festival and we all had a cracking good time.

Footnote—Galway is known as "the city of the tribes." If your name is Athy, Blake, Bodkin, Browne, D'Arcy, Deanna, Ffont, Ffrench, Joyce, Kirwan, Martin, Morris, Lynch or Skerrit, you could be a descendant of one of the 14 tribes that once ruled Galway.

CHANGING TREND

In the first 60 years of the century the total of agricultural workers in Canada dropped to 11 per cent from 40 per cent of the total labor force.

Nature's Finest Navigator Always Ends Up in the Soup

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The National Science Foundation (NSF) took off its hat last week to the green sea turtle.

This 300-to-800-pound turtle, Chelonia Mydas Mydas (CMM), finds its way into some of the finest soups ever concocted by man.

But that is not altogether the reason for the NSF's profound admiration. CMM, as a hatchling hardly big enough to crawl, invariably and with little difficulty finds its way over hummock and through pitfall from its nest to the distant ocean.

As a grownup CMM also finds its way unerringly from the coast of Brazil to nesting grounds 1,400 miles away on Ascension Island, a seven-mile-wide pinpoint on the map of the South Atlantic.

As a way-finder, the green sea turtle is "one of nature's finest navigators," the NSF said in a long report.

CMM visits Ascension from Brazil every two or three years to breed, lay eggs, and hatch young. Turtles tagged at Ascension have been found later on the Brazilian coast.

It is thought they may find their way to the vicinity of Ascension Island by celestial navigation (the way some birds and fish are known to do) and then spot the beach where they were born by taste or odor imprinted upon their senses long ago as hatchlings.

CMM used to have several nesting beaches in the Caribbean. But commercial hunters have made it almost extinct in that area.

Despite tagging and spying, CMM has managed to keep most of its life a secret from scientists.

They plan now to monitor the big turtle's comings and goings by radio. Small transmitters attached to CMM's shell, scientists figure, would enable them to do that.

Rare Bat Gives Birth In Captivity

LONDON (AP)—The Regents Park Zoo proudly announce the birth of a Buttikofer's epauletted fruitbat — smack in the office of Dr. Desmond Morris, curator of mammals.

Morris was agog. The birth in captivity of such a bat is extremely rare.

The parents were given to the zoo six weeks ago by J. I. Menzies, a British schoolmaster living at Bo, Sierra Leone, one of the few places where such bats exist.

Morris housed them in a portable cage in his office, to keep them under observation.

The Buttikofer's epauletted fruitbat is named after Buttikofer, its discoverer, and has humps on its shoulders like the epaulettes on a uniform and it eats fruit.

Lockout to Follow Electrical Strike

VANCOUVER (CP)—A strike by a score of electrical workers Friday threatens to become an industry-wide lockout Monday.

A spokesman for 32 British Columbia electrical contractors said today 25 of the firms will close their doors at 8 a.m. Monday.

A majority of the 800 employees of the industry will be sent home in retaliation for the strike which started at Tide Company of B.C. on nearby Annacis Island.

Hopes for a last-minute settlement were dimmed by company spokesman Frank G. Myles who said Saturday absolutely no attempt would be made to meet officials of Local 213 of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers (CLC).

Union spokesman Art O'Keefe said: "Our doors will be open today and Sunday."

A work stoppage would tie up such major projects as Vancouver Vocational Institute extension and B.C Hydro's Burrard Thermal plant near Vancouver. It would also affect line work undertaken for B.C. Hydro.

The union is holding out for 17 cents an hour wage increase in a one-year contract.

The latest company offer was 25 cents over two years.

The electrical workers went on strike Friday despite a threat by the Associated Electrical Contractors of B.C. to lock out workers at its 32 member firms if a strike were called at any one of them. Lock-out notices were served on the firms' employees after the union gave strike notice to seven companies.

Private Plane Lands, Burns But None Hurt at Toronto

TORONTO (UPI) — Firemen at Toronto International Airport worked for 15 minutes Saturday to extinguish a blaze in a private aircraft.

As the plane, a twin-engined DC-3, touched down at the airport one of its engines burst into flames.

The aircraft's crew escaped safely.

Spokesmen for the manufacturing company refused to comment on the fire. Firemen said it is not known how the blaze started.

Petrol Supply Hit

LONDON (Reuters) — Many London service stations rationed gasoline to customers Saturday because of wildcat strikes by gas tanker drivers.

Several stations reported they would run dry by Monday unless there was a change during the weekend.

Major Projects Underway

Lots of Work Ahead For Building Trades

A number of projects scheduled to begin this fall are expected to maintain a high level of employment in the construction business throughout Greater Victoria this winter.

Main bulk of an army of sub-trades are expected to begin work within a month at the giant Mayfair Shopping Plaza development on Douglas, where bulldozers and blasting powder has removed some 35,000 yards of earth and 10,000 yards of rock from the site.

NEARLY READY

Excavations for foundations for the new Woodwards store and other business premises are all but complete.

A spokesman for the $6,000,000 John Laing & Son project said pile drivers would start hammering in the heavy steel beams this week.

Excavation of the site started five weeks ago and, the spokesman said, bids depository for sub trades close on Sept. 24.

The shopping centre is expected to be completed in time for Christmas trade in 1963.

Select tenders have been called for the general contract for a five-storey, reinforced concrete business block in the 1000 Block Fort.

Architect John Di Castri said completion date for the Finance Building is set for April.

Excavation of the site started in August and foundation piles are now in place, he said.

HOTEL EXPANSION

The same firm of architects is awaiting approval of sketches submitted for a $250,000 expansion plan for the Cherry Bank Hotel.

The proposed additions were announced by owner Ralph Cossey and plans call for construction of an indoor swimming pool, artificial sunbathing solarium and Finnish-style steam baths. Also proposed is a banquet hall seating 275.

NEW 10TH HOLE

Depository bids close on Sept. 20 and general bids on Sept. 21 for a major renovation of Oak Bay Golf Club.

Architects are Birley and Wagg and plans call for a general reorganization of the interior of the clubhouse. Club officials have set aside up to $100,000 to cover the cost of renovations and new furnishings for the club.

Entry-ways will be changed to permit direct access to the parking lot; the main lounge will be increased in size and removable partitions will replace walls separating the main and mixed lounges and the dining room.

MODERN KITCHEN

The kitchen will be modernized and the entire interior refurbished. Plans also call for realignment of the locker rooms and installation of a lower lounge, plus a complete re-piping of the heating system.

The plans have been drawn to preserve the Tudor exterior of the clubhouse.

Portions of the clubhouse will be closed down during the renovating, which will be carried out in stages, starting in October.

ALL AREA FIRMS

Select tenders have been invited from Farmer Construction Ltd., Luney Bros. & Hamilton Ltd., G. H. Wheaton Ltd., H. E. Fowler & Sons Ltd., M. P. Paine Co., and E. J. Hunter & Sons, all Greater Victoria firms.

Select tenders have been invited for the Financial Building project from Farmer Construction Ltd., Luney Bros & Hamilton Ltd., Commonwealth Construction Co. Ltd., Anglin-Norcross Western Ltd., all of Victoria.

Outside firms invited to tender are Burns & Dutton Concrete & Construction Co. Ltd., Bennett & White Construction Co. Ltd., Narod Construction Ltd., all of Vancouver.

Tenders for the $700,000 airport terminal at Patricia Bay are returnable at Ottawa on Sept. 20, with the mailing deadline Sept. 18.

A dozen construction companies in Victoria, Vancouver and Edmonton have taken plans for study.

Luney Bros. & Hamilton have been awarded the contract for alterations to the McLennan, McFeely & Prior warehouse at Pembroke and Government.

The company was low bidder at $33,695 among six companies that submitted tenders. Architects for the project are Dirassar & James, Vancouver.

FISHERMEN'S WHARF

Plans are being prepared and tenders are expected to be called in a month for construction of a $269,000 fishermen's wharf at Shoal Harbor, in Sidney.

The new wharf will provide berthing facilities for about 70 vessels with provision for expansion to about 145.

James Bay New Look

New skyline of Victoria is tangible evidence of the success of city council planning policies designed to rehabilitate James Bay area of mostly older homes, a bit rundown, using private capital. This 12-storey apartment building on Douglas Street at Beacon Hill Park will shortly be followed by other high rises now under construction.—(Karl Spreitz)

Worst Summer in Memory But Autumn Will Be Fine

Summer is due to end officially at 5:35 a.m. today—and not many people will be sorry to see it go.

This has been the worst summer in memory for most people in the area. It was generally rainy, cloudy and cool in the extreme, and the weather did its best to squelch an otherwise booming tourist season. Autumn is expected to start with morning cloudiness which will change to sunshine, with temperatures of 65 to 68 degrees.

600 Log Gifts

By JILL ARLETT

A steady whine of power saws pierced the air at Clover Point yesterday afternoon as more than 600 Victoria University students turned driftwood into firewood in aid of the United Appeal.

More than $150 was collected by the students from the sale of wood which was loaded into cars waiting in line at the Point. Donations averaged $2 a carload.

Both freshmen and upperclassmen crowded the beach all around Clover Point as they collected driftwood, divided it into sections with power saws and chopped and stacked it into piles ready to be picked up.

The sawdust flew well on into the afternoon as people continued to go to the area.

By 5 p.m. the beach was cleaned of a lot of the driftwood and the amateur loggers stopped to nurse their blisters and indulge in a corn roast.

Student organizer Terry Clark said last night the success of the log-saw was largely due to the enthusiasm of the students and the addition of more power saws.

"Everyone worked hard all afternoon—especially the girls, who carried most of the wood to the waiting cars."

Although the wood-cutting took up most of the students' energy, there was still plenty left when 50 dozen ears of corn—donated by fourth-year arts student Nels Granewall—were eagerly devoured.

Pleased with the success of the event, Mr. Clark said the students' log-saw will undoubtedly be held again next year.

Next week students will make an official presentation of the money collected to the United Appeal.

Crash Cuts Man's Arm

A Victoria motorist was taken to St. Joseph's Hospital with a badly cut arm after his small car rolled over on Sooke Road last night.

Stephen Priske, 3091 Paisley, was admitted for surgery and was in satisfactory condition early this morning. Scott Robinson of Otter Point, a passenger in the car, was uninjured.

Police said damage to the car was $500.

Garden Meeting

Regular meeting of the View Royal Garden Club will be held at 8:15 p.m. Wednesday in the community hall.

Poor Enrolment Hits Sooke Night Classes

Most of the night school courses offered this year for the first time by Sooke school board will be cancelled due to poor enrolment.

Courses in 30 subjects are being offered but a minimum enrolment of 15 is needed be for a course can be held.

Herman Leung, director of adult education for the Sooke school board, said last night it appeared likely six courses will be held — dressmaking, typing, flower arranging, shorthand, ceramics and bookkeeping.

About 150 enrolments have been received for the 30 courses, he said. Deadline is Oct. 1.

Classes will be held in Milnes Landing and Belmont high schools on dates to be announced.

There are still vacancies in the shorthand and bookkeeping classes, Mr. Leung said.

Other courses offered include public speaking, commercial law, boat building, judo, choral singing and badminton.

Demand Extends Belt Installation

Members of three Victoria car clubs yesterday could not cope with the swarms of Victoria motorists who wanted safety belts installed in their cars.

Members of the Mystics, the Roadsters and the Quarter-Milers worked non-stop from 9 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. yesterday at a vacant paved lot and installed 170 seat belts—twice the number anticipated.

WILL CONTINUE

The hot-rodders will install safety belts for free next Saturday and Sunday and weekends after that as long as the land-office demand keeps up.

Car owners can buy belts for the $6.30 cost price and have them installed free at the vacant Fyfe Cleaners lot on Douglas Street.

An official of the B.C. Automobile Association hailed the action of the Victoria hot-rod clubs in organizing and staffing the free belt-installation centre.

Cmdr. Frank Barclay, assistant secretary-manager of the Victoria branch, said, "We are too often prone to criticize members of these car clubs. We should be as quick to commend."

Airmen to Meet

First meeting of the season of 800 Pacific Wing, RCAF Association will be held at 8 p.m. Wednesday, in the RCAF Urban Centre.

Mac-Powell:

Won't Sue IWA Says Firm

MacMillan, Bloedel & Powell River Co. has "the right to sue for substantial damages" an IWA local for losses entailed by a "wildcat" strike of union members at Port Alberni, a company spokesman said last night.

But the company has no intention of suing—and its application to the Labor Relations Board to prosecute the president of Local 1-85 and 48 boom men was just to "place it officially on the record that these 'wildcat' strikes are illegal."

CONFERENCE MOVE

The comment followed charges made in an "emergency" resolution to the IWA western regional conference in Vancouver, which said the giant lumber firm was out to "smash" the Port Alberni local.

The resolution called for nationwide support for the union's six locals in a "war" against the firm.

"It must be obvious the resolution's language used is not that of responsible Canadian trade unionists," the company spokesman said.

SENIORITY DISPUTE

The resolution was presented to the convention by Local 1-85 president Walter Allen, cited along with 48 boom men by the company in its application.

The boom men walked off the job on Aug. 27 in a seniority dispute, returning Sept. 3, after 500 millworkers were idled.

The resolution called MacMillan-Powell River "dogmatic, autocratic and reactionary."

INTENTION CLAIMED

It said it was the announced intention of the company "to commence proceedings without justification in an attempt to smash a local union of the IWA and to intimidate and harass the union's president and a number of boom men at the Somass division."

The company statement said the Labor Relations Board will decide if "prosecution is justified."

WILL SAY SO

"If (the board) does not think it is proper to prosecute the union, it will say so. The company has no other purpose than to end a series of irresponsible 'wildcat' strikes by Local 1-85 of the IWA whose president is Walter Allen.

"We are not seeking to exact retribution. The company has the right to sue for substantial damages. It is not doing this.

"It is only concerned with having it placed officially on the record that these 'wildcat' strikes are illegal, in preventing future strikes and in establishing the company has carried out all its obligations and has obeyed the law."

True Test of Gifted Pupils Psychologists' Key Goal

By IAN STREET

The search for gifted children and better ways to teach them is acquiring more and more importance in today's educational system, Toronto-born Dr. Gordon Henley said yesterday.

Dr. Henley is visiting associate professor of psychology at Victoria University for the coming year and during his stay will serve as consultant psychologist to the metropolitan board of health.

The consulting side of his job will take up two days each week, mostly with children referred by school nurses because they have emotional problems.

Dr. Henley stressed his job won't involve searching out of gifted youngsters in Greater Victoria schools. "This is an educational problem," he said.

But in the general field, he said, psychologists are actively working to establish accurate means of testing creative ability.

This is necessary because the gifted youngster doesn't necessarily have a high IQ.

"The problem is basically one of the schools helping the gifted youngster to identify his particular creative talents and then to help these special children make the best use of available educational facilities," said Dr. Henley.

In this educational function, psychology can be of great assistance by carrying out research that results in development of accurate tests to determine creative ability.

Dr. Henley said there is growing pressure on children to do well in school because higher education is becoming increasingly necessary for even modest business success. He added the pressure on youngsters to achieve good academic standing was "not necessarily harmful."

College students, said Dr. Henley are more serious than those of the early postwar years and more conscious of the global implications of such grave issues as nuclear armament.

VITAMINS B, G, N, C and O?: A "free 30-day supply" of vitamins has caused a lot of annoyance to Bette McEwen, 1162 Fort. Seems she read an ad offering this bargain with "no obligation to keep buying anything," so she sent off the coupon. But when the "free" vitamins arrived an enclosure informed her they were only free if she signed up to buy them regularly. Now she is getting unpleasant dunning letters from the east, threatening legal action. It would be interesting to see just how far the company would go to collect on its "free" offer with "no obligation to keep buying anything."

NURSES ANN AND TED MILLER

'Christ Tended Sick' Male Nurse Replies

Men Originated Nursing Led by Apostles, Priests

By EILEEN LEAROYD

If anyone calls "Nurse" in the Miller house on Shelbourne Street, everyone comes running. Because not only is mother a nurse, but so is father.

Ann Miller is a registered nurse from Australia who works on the women's medical ward at St. Joseph's Hospital.

Ted Miller is a registered nurse from Australia who works on the men's surgical ward.

He is the only registered nurse (male) in the entire hospital.

Ann and Ted have worked at St. Joseph's for only three months. They are both SRN's (State Registered nurses) of Melbourne.

RAAF

Ted, who was in the medical section of the Royal Australian Air Force during the war, takes it right on the jaw when asked, "How is it that a man is a nurse?" As sure as thermometers and fever go together, people ask that.

He answers with fair patience, "A person is simply a nurse. It's unimportant whether they are male or female."

He noted that in Australia and on the Continent some 50 per cent of nurses are male.

Mr. Miller pointed out that the earliest known nurses were men.

"Florence Nightingale didn't invent nursing you know," he smiled. "She made sweeping reforms in nursing. Before that there had to be people to tend the sick—and they were men."

EARLY NURSES

"Christ was a nurse," said Mr. Miller. "He cared for, and tended the sick. So did the Apostles and the Disciples. The Good Samaritan was a nurse. John the Baptist was a nurse."

So, said Mr. Miller, were the Knights of St. John of Jerusalem (originators of St. John Ambulance), the original hospitallers, who founded a hospital in 1048 at Malta.

"In early times, there was superstitious fear of illness. And so it was the monks, abbots, charitable brothers and priests who cared for the sick. They were nurses," he said firmly.

"OLD HAG"

With a winning smile directed at his wife, Mr. Miller explained that the term "old hag" referred originally to a female nurse. He said the village "hag" was often an old woman, frequently given to excessive drinking, who was the only person in the village desperate enough to risk nursing the sick to earn a few pennies.

Let us hasten to say, that nurse Ann Miller is an attractive young woman with a merry disposition. She met her husband when they were both in training in St. Vincent's Hospital, Melbourne.

In common with practise in Australia, she is also a midwife, and has "birthed" 23 babies herself. Mr. Miller was trained in obstetrics in Canada.

SURGICAL

The Millers came to Canada 18 months ago. After passing their Canadian RN's, they worked at Kitimat Hospital where Mr. Miller headed the surgical ward and did operating room duty—then they joined the staff at St. Joseph's.

Commenting on the trend to male nurses in this country, Mr. Miller said the problem here in the past seemed to be mainly one of accommodation. It's solved by giving men a living-out allowance. Two male student nurses have begun training this week, Roy Harding of Vernon, and Jack Nazaroff of Brilliant.

So far there are no more male nurses coming up in the Miller family. They have one daughter age five who is Anne with an "e."

The highly-trained Millers are regarded as happy acquisitions by the hospital, and lucky the patient who calls, "Nurse!" and finds one or both of the nurses Miller by their side.

Tree-shaded main entrance dominated by the red brick walls and clock tower of the Young Building, presents a traditional picture of the original campus. In complete contrast to this will be the modern campus at Gordon Head. Following a day's lectures, Carrol White, pre-pharmacy student from Toronto, Dawna McFadden, first-year arts, Jim Bigsby, second-year pre-law, Marianne Johns and J. J. Camp, both second-year arts, start for home.

Top Right: Nothing new to faculty members Michael Warren and Tony Emery is the Frosh outfit, here modelled by Mark Metcalfe. At right are Judy Gole, second-year education, and Jonn Mathers, first-year arts.

Right: Handing a cup of "cafe" brew to Peter Armstrong of Brazil, a second-year arts man, are Elizabeth Lynch, Nanaimo, and Valerie Mitchell, Victoria, both education students.

Quad between the original Young Building and the Ewing Building provides ample space for a central meeting place of students. Frosh and upper classmen discuss events of first week. Left, Jennifer Dyer, Ian Boorman, Jim Taylor, Roger Garman, Russ Leech, Susan Ellis, Bob McGraw and in the centre, Jayni Price.

Tom Masters and Judy Taylor relax in the gardens between lectures. Third-year arts student, Tom is headed for law school after obtaining his degree. Following completion of first year at UBC, Judy came to Victoria to continue toward her future in the foreign service. Her subjects this year include German and Russian.

Picking out books at the book store consumes much time and more money, but this relatively small room in the Paul Building serves all students' needs for texts and supplies. Jan Macht, left, and Karen Leith are both second-year arts students.

Couple

To Live In Guelph

Michelmas daisies and gladiolus in shades of pink and white decorated St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church last night for the marriage of Diane Louise Bird and Mr. Stanley Lawrence (Lorne) Laughlin. Very Rev. J. Lewis W. McLean officiated for the daughter of Mrs. R. A. Bird of Victoria and the late Mr. George E. A. Bird, and the son of Mr. and Mrs. Jack Laughlin, Guelph, Ont.

Given in marriage by her uncle, Mr. Alex Bird, the bride chose a floor-length gown of white French brocade styled on princess lines, with full skirt flowing to a chapel train. Capelet collar encrusted with seed pearls formed a V at the back. Her chapel-length veil of illusion was held by a coronet of pearls. Red roses and stephanotis were in her bouquet.

Mrs. R. Deal, matron of honor and Mrs. V. Turpin, bride's matron, were identically gowned in emerald green taffeta with white accessories. Hats were of white and green feathers and veiling and their bouquets were creamy asters. Bride's gifts to her attendants were drop pearls set in a gold seashell.

Mr. Ross Deal was best man and Mr. Edward Bird and Mr. Alan Quarmby ushered.

Red roses in crystal vases flanked the wedding cake at the reception held at the Dockyard Recreation Hall. Mr. C. Philip Moran proposed the toast. Leaving on an up-Island honeymoon, the new Mrs. Laughlin donned an aquamarine wool suit with matching fur collar and cuffs and black accessories. Her corsage was a white orchid. The couple will live in Guelph, Ont.

Foxtrot Flattens Flowers

LONDON (Reuters) — A solemn warning to men went out Friday from a male fashion magazine — make sure your buttonhole flower is on the left lapel of your dinner jacket.

"In these days of female dissemabling even the most modern poitrine is boosted by pneumatic and sponge rubber assistance to a degree of considerable protuberance."

"A close, passionate, slow foxtrot will find your carnation squashed as flat as those pressed blooms yellowing in the family Bible."

Lt.-Cmdr. Earl D. Thompson, CD and Bar, and Mrs. Thompson have returned to Victoria with their children, Ian, 12; Ann, 19, and Rory, 5; also cocker spaniel, Kim. Lt.-Cmdr. Thompson, a veteran navy diver, has been on duty with the Atlantic Command for the past 18 years and has now been appointed to the West Coast diving establishment. Miss Thompson attended Dalhousie University and was associated with their biology department during the summer. She will enter her third year at Victoria University. Mrs. Thompson is a sister of the Misses Jewell, Glenora Place, and Lt.-Cmdr. Thompson is the son of Mrs. Harold Thompson and the late Mr. Thompson, pioneers of Royal Oak. The Thompsons will be residing in View Royal.

Professor Becomes Actor

Mr. Carl Hare, professor of English and director of drama at Victoria College recently addressed the local University Women's Club on "An Actor Prepares." This proved to be autobiographical.

Mr. Hare told how in 1957 he decided to temporarily desert his chosen profession of teaching to become an actor.

He went to New York where he auditioned before such celebrities as Leo G. Carroll and Helen Hayes for The Royal Academy of Dramatic Art in London. For several years he studied modern and Shakespearean acting techniques, body and voice control, pantomime, and history of the theatre.

Engagements in weekly repertory followed Mr. Hare's completion of his dramatic schooling which later expanded to repertory theatre in London. On returning to Canada Mr. Hare participated in the Vancouver Theatre of the CBC.

Mrs. A. H. Gunning presided at the meeting and greeted the following new members, introduced by Mrs. J. L. Andrews: Miss Maimie Simpson, , Mrs. F. H. Graham, Miss Elizabeth Anne Seale, and Miss Elsie K. Smith.

Your Problems

By Ann Landers

Dear Readers: Recently someone wrote to ask what I thought about friends and relatives taking flash-bulb pictures and movies in a funeral home. The writer asked if I thought this was right or wrong.

I replied it was not a matter of right or wrong—but rather a matter of taste. I expressed the personal opinion that movie cameras and flash bulbs are out of place at funeral homes.

Dozens of readers called me hard-hearted and cruel. "We run the movies of grandfather's funeral every time relatives come from out of the city," wrote a Missouri woman. "They are so grateful, especially the ones who couldn't make it."

A reader from Kentucky wrote, "I wouldn't take a million dollars for the pictures I made of my husband laid out in his blue suit. He looked better in that box than he had anytime in the last 10 years."

It is not my wish to impose my views on others but when I am asked for an opinion I give it. It seems to me that most people would prefer to be remembered as they were in life, not in death. The final decision, of course, rests with the family.

Dear Ann Landers: I'm a widow who has been keeping company with an architect for five years. His wife died several years ago. We both visit my married children frequently. My children admire and respect him, and he is fond of them.

He has married children who live in this city, also, but I have never met them. I suspect he has not introduced me to his children because he's afraid they won't like me. I've hinted strongly that I would love to meet his family but he ignores the hints and changes the subject.

Eventually I hope we will marry although he has never mentioned it. I do not accept social engagements with other men and he has no other women companions. But I'm terribly unhappy about this one point and want to know if I should press further. Or should I let the matter slide until he is ready? — THERESA.

Dear Theresa: If you are content to enjoy the architect's company—fine, but in my view this relationship will never get off the drawing board.

After five years if a man has not mentioned marriage I suspect he never will.

Mrs. R. Szerlowska, 3266 Cook Street, announces the engagement of her youngest daughter, Anna, to Mr. Geza Paul Nagy of Victoria, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Nagy of Hungary.

The wedding will take place in Sacred Heart Church, Oct. 13 at 11 a.m. Rev. Father J. Planeta will perform nuptial mass. — (Miss Szerlowska's photo by Filion.)

Too Old at Forty?

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

The Joys of Middle Age Have Turned Sour

By RON POULTON
Telegram News Service

A man of 75 said: "Twenty-five years ago I thought I would never grow old. He said it as though he was still surprised to find himself consigned to the chimney corner.

A boy of seven asked his father: "Did they have electric lights and cars when you were little?" To the boy, the father seemed old.

The little boy was close to knowing that where the mind goes, the physique follows. He was more mentally in tune with his grandfather because, when the sun warmed the garden, they had a lovely time telling stories to each other.

The father had reached an age where he had become a creature apart.

In his 40s, he is in a minority. There are more people under 16 and more over 65 in Canada today than ever before. Those in their 40s have shown the least proportionate increase.

And on this — the thinnest stratum of society — falls the greatest weight. The man in his 40s becomes the executive; he raises the family; he pays the bills; he is looked to for maturity. He is the anchor man of our society.

When he wrote Life Begins At 40, Walter Pitkin described him in dancing prose: "The whole world has been remodelled for your greater glory. Every day brings forth some new thing that adds to the joy of life after 40.

"Work becomes easy and brief. Play becomes rich and longer. Leisure lengthens. Life's afternoon is brighter, warmer, fuller of song; and long before the shadows stretch, every fruit grows ripe."

Pitkin peered rosily into the future and told him: "You will remodel your frames and your temperaments with cunningly concocted foods, and pills. You will have little cause to worry over the price of clothes and rent."

He declared, ringingly: "Life begins at 40. The day before yesterday it wasn't even a dream. Yesterday it was a silly lie. Today it is a half truth. Tomorrow it will be an axiom."

But Pitkin wrote that in 1932, looking ahead to 1975. Tomorrow is almost here—and the pace of postwar living has swept his pretty notions down the drain.

Far from reaching what Pitkin called "the simplified time of life," today's Over Forties are learning that anthropologist Margaret Mead was closer to the mark when she attacked the tendency to "put all the learning into childhood, all the work into middle age and all the regrets into old age."

Pitkin's Nirvana has been kept at bay by a peculiar postwar attitude. It is seen in the schizophrenic thinking which decrees in one breath that the years over 40 are man's most productive and, in the next, that those over 40 are too old to hire.

A man in his forties faces hazards undreamt of in Pitkin's philosophy. If he's a climber, he faces more competition for an executive post simply because there are now more competitors in his age group.

Women have also moved into industry. The last count showed 1,780,000 women in a labor force of 6,752,000. Women are competing for executive posts in everything from the garment to the galvanized iron industry.

Many men in their forties feel they've passed the point of no return. It's too late to realize their dreams. They find that, despite their capabilities, they're merely in training for retirement.

A wholly different psychological, technilogical and social climate washes over the work benches, labor exchanges and unemployment wickets today.

Alan Thomas, director of the Canadian Association For Adult Education, reasons: "We know a lot about the problems of those under 16 and over 65, and we spend a lot of time on their welfare.

"But we forget their problems begin to accelerate when they are in their forties, and we don't know much about the forties."

He claims: "Canada is a heck of a country to be young in. There are 100,000 teen-agers entering the labor stream annually, and we can't absorb them.

"Then we take the 30 to 40 age group and sort of hang them in the smoke house to season. The brilliant ones run for the states.

"When men reach 65 we shake the branch of the tree and tumble them out to die like so many apples.

"The people in their 40s are often the ones who decide to drop a bomb or plan a town; do all sorts of things affecting the old and the young. But I don't think society trains them well enough to make sweeping decisions for segments of the population which greatly outnumber them."

The Unemployment Insurance Commission (in a booklet called How Old is Old?) called the idea that men are too old for promotion at 40 "an indictment of our social system."

The commission said: "It is a tragedy that so many Canadian men and women, mentally and physically able to work, are deprived of the inherent right to earn a living because of age discrimination."

Dr. W. G. Scott, employment specialist with the National Employment Service, said a man's ability to learn and retain knowledge doesn't begin to decline until the age of 75; "and even then it fades very slowly."

The Labor Department did a study and shot down the theory that a man at 40 is beginning to slow. It found older salesmen better salesmen. "In fact, salesmanship often begins at 40."

He remembered a fellow who went to a lumber yard and volunteered to work two days for nothing to show what he could do. The foreman liked his attitude and took him to the boss.

Dr. Scott said: "The boss didn't even look up. He said, 'How old are you?' The fellow said, '57.' The boss said, 'Too old.' But the boss was 83."

Juveniles Anonymous Cut Down on Crime

SAULT STE. MARIE, Ont. (CP)—Sault Ste. Marie's first psychiatrist told Friday of a cure for juvenile delinquency that has all but eliminated the problem in the city.

Dr. Hans Schwarzl was speaking to the annual meeting of district 19 of the Ontario Medical Association on his associations with Juvenile Anonymous, the delinquent's counterpart to Alcoholics Anonymous. The Sault organization is believed to be the only one of its kind in Canada.

HELP EACH OTHER

In JA, the doctor said, young thugs and petty delinquents take themselves in hand and with the help of fellow delinquents, discuss their problems freely and help themselves become useful members of society.

He said one of JA's present officers is the former leader of one of the city's major gangs. The youngsters run the organization themselves, work at their own cures and help each other. They now have about 60 members.

"Since this organization was started a year ago crime in the Sault has decreased amazingly," Dr. Schwarzl said. "At one time it was hardly safe to sit on the Sault's public beaches for fear your tent or rubber mattress would be slashed or your wife dragged off along the beach."

"Now the beaches are completely safe and downtown crime has largely disappeared."

Did U-2 Pilot Give Up Plane?

NEW DELHI (UPI) — The leftist weekly Mainstream reports the U-2 reconnaissance plane the Communists say they shot down over Red China actually was handed over to them by a Nationalist Chinese deserter.

The U-2 captured in China was actually flown out of Taiwan (Formosa) by a deserter who landed safely on the (Red-held Chinese) mainland.

Women Executives Told Some Aren't

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (AP)—When 34 top level women executives submit to mass psychoanalysis there's no telling what will happen.

That was the case this week at the University of Michigan. The 34 women executives, representing 19 states and the Virgin Islands, paid $500 each to attend a leadership seminar—the first for women.

COLD, CRUEL LOOK

What they got for their money was a cold, cruel look at themselves.

For five hectic days the women raced through 12 hours of lectures and discussions daily and two hours of homework nightly, only to discover — in some cases — that they weren't executives at all.

They were berated by 10 speakers—all male—who exposed their weaknesses thus: "The woman executive is too emotional . . . She devotes too much time to home and family to become successful . . . She lets her sex interfere with her job."

READY TO FIGHT

The ladies persevered, for the most part. But there were times when they reared up, ready to fight. One, Genevieve Hazzard of Detroit, Campbell-Ewald Company's only woman account executive, objected strongly when author Perrin Stryker, urged them to put aside their maternal instincs if they want to succeed.

Although unmarried, Miss Hazzard insisted that a woman could lead a balanced life—dividing her time between family and business — without harming either one.

'NO SUCH THING'

Another, Mrs. Margaret Brand Smith, president of Union Bankers Insurance Company, Dallas, Tex., bristled when told "women should try to think like men."

"I don't think there is any such thing as a man's way of thinking," she said. "In the long run, it's business talent that's going to get you where you're going and not whether you're a man or woman."

9 IN MEMORIAM

BROWN—In loving memory of Herb Brown, who passed away Sept. 23, 1951.
The fairest lilies are first to fall,
The sweetest first to fade,
The fondest, dearest, best of all
At peaceful rest is laid.
He faded from before our eyes,
And all too soon was lost;
But in God's garden free from pain,
Where grow His fairest flowers,
We know that we shall meet again,
This fairest bloom of ours.
—Sadly missed by mom, sisters Edie and Linda, brother George, and Mona.

CASEY—In loving memory of Rene Casey, who passed away Sept. 23, 1955.
She wouldn't ask for grieving,
She wouldn't ask for tears,
But only to be remembered
With the passing of the years.
—Ray, Kay, Elwood and Bea.

KING—In loving memory of our mother, Sarah King, who died Sept. 23, 1960, and our Dad, George King, who passed away Aug. 28, 1957.
Nothing but memories as we journey on,
Longing for a smile from a loved one gone;
None knows the depths of our deep regret,
But we remember when others forget.
—Ever remembered by the family.

ROBINSON—In loving memory of Leonard C. Robinson, who passed away Sept. 24, 1960.
Nothing can ever take away
The love a heart holds dear,
Fond memories linger every day,
Remembrance keeps him near.
—Ever remembered by his wife, Ann.

FROST—In loving memory of our beloved son and brother, P.O. H. H. Frost, R.C.A.F., aged 23 years, killed Sept. 19, 1943.
Tears will never darken or shadows dim
The beautiful memories we have of him.
—Lovingly remembered by his loving wife, mom, dad, sister, brothers and auntie.

Winning Contract

Bridge Quiz:

Partner's response at the two-level promises not less than 10 points and a fair hand. This information should be taken into account when you choose your rebid. So, too, should your fit with the suit in which partner has responded.

With both sides vulnerable, the bidding goes:

South	West	North	East
1 ♥	Pass	2 ♦	Pass

What should South rebid with each of the following hands?

(a) ♠ 2 ♥ A K J 6 ♦ K Q 7 6 ♣ A Q 5 4
(b) ♠ 2 ♥ A K Q 6 2 ♦ 7 6 ♣ A K 6 4 2
(c) ♠ 2 ♥ A 9 7 6 2 ♦ K J ♣ A K Q J 2
(d) ♠ A K 9 8 ♥ A Q 10 9 5 ♦ 2 ♣ A 9 2
(e) ♠ 7 6 ♥ A K 7 6 5 ♦ A Q 10 6 ♣ 9 4
(f) ♠ 7 6 ♥ A K 7 6 5 ♦ 9 4 ♣ A Q 7 6

Answers to Bridge Quiz:

a. Four clubs. Your hand has acquired tremendous added strength because of your exceptional fit for partner's suit and your singleton spade. This latter feature you will show when you raise partner's suit on your next turn.

b. Three clubs. Although you have no support for partner's suit, his bid promises to take care of two of your quick losers, and you should make your normal bid, even though it takes you to the three-level and is forcing.

c. Four clubs. Any other bid would create a problem for you later. But after this strength-showing rebid, partner's next call should make your course clear.

d. Two spades. Partner's diamond response isn't especially encouraging, but you have the values for a reverse, and should not hesitate to show them.

e. Three diamonds. Your excellent diamond support is a major part of the strength already shown by your opening bid. A single raise is all you can muster.

f. Two hearts. Far too weak to push the bidding to the three-level by showing your club suit.

Institute Seeks Key to Shocks

By GEORGE FRAJKOR

MONTREAL (CP)—The human body is a fine conductor of electricity and this leads to some of medicine's most complicated neuroses.

Electricity is a total injuring agent, and a project is under way at Montreal's Allan Memorial Institute and the Royal Victoria Hospital to find out what it does.

"An electric shock is carried through the whole body," explains Dr. Eddie Kingstone, in charge of the psychiatric end of the project. "In theory it injures every single cell. It's rare that we get a chance to study an injury agent so widespread in its effects."

VICTIMS UPSET

Any severe injury can turn a well-adjusted person neurotic. Someone who loses an arm or leg or gets a head injury is understandably upset. If he is an athlete or a skilled tradesman he is understandably even more upset since his whole way of life is likely to be destroyed by the injury.

It's not so easy, however, to assign behavior after electric shock to neat little categories of organic and psychological reasons.

FITS OF WEEPING

"In electric shock cases, you get everything," Dr. Kingstone says. "There may be brain damage. There may be bad surface burns. There may be damage to the nervous system. There may be massive bleeding in the upper gastro-intestinal system. There may be fractures caused by falling. Or any combination of these."

If a patient recovering from electric shock begins to develop fits of weeping, why does he do it? Direct brain damage? Normal anxiety about being deformed, losing a job?

FIND RELATIONSHIP

"That's what we're up against; trying to find the relationship between the electric shock and the personality changes, and to see if the effects can be isolated and assigned."

Inspiration for the project came from a paper delivered by U.S. Army surgeons to the American College of Surgeons convention in 1961. It noted that in electric shock cases, certain personality changes were observed after the patients recovered. No clear reason for the changes was apparent.

So far, the Allan team has had two patients to work on. One is an apprentice electrician who touched a 500-volt line. The second is a Newfoundlander who lost an arm after touching a 33,000-volt line. More patients are expected as word gets around that the hospital is interested.

The Royal Victoria supplies the patients to the Allan, its psychiatric wing.

When a patient comes in with electric shock injuries the Allan is immediately notified. Every symptom is carefully noted—what the patient says about the accident; how he appears to be reacting to it when entering hospital.

The psychiatrists then go about getting a picture of the patient's personality before the accident. His family, fellow-workers and friends are interviewed.

Progress and adjustment as he recovers are noted. After release he is periodically checked by social workers and psychiatrists to see how he has adapted to life after the shock.

It will take a year at least before any positive statement about adjustment can be made.

Ottawa to Seize Rolling Stock

In Case of Nuclear Attack Say Goodbye to Your Car

By JACK VAN DUSEN

OTTAWA (CP)—Your family car could become a vital part of emergency transport or a vehicle of mercy in event of a nuclear war. If you're willing to drive it, so much the better.

Canadians refusing to turn over their cars for use as ambulances or for other requirements of government would likely be unable to buy gasoline or would have the autos confiscated.

UNDER CONTROL

Truck drivers, trainmen, pilots and seamen — virtually everyone connected with keeping the country rolling on land, sea and in the air—would come under control of a giant federal agency now being developed within the transport department.

"The minister of transport will have control over everything that moves in Canada—except feet," says Doug Keddie, 53-year-old emergency co-ordinator for the department.

"The Canadian government has seen fit to assume basic responsibility for practically everything in connection with what may happen in Canada in event of nuclear attack," the wartime RAF officer said in an interview.

If Canada's 16 major cities, the most likely target areas, were attacked, there would be national disruption of commerce, industry, art, social life and government.

With such a situation in mind, the government has ordered all federal departments to prepare for emergency control.

Thus the transport department would oversee all of Canada's transportation facilities. Other concerns of the department would be communications, radio and television stations and weather forecasting.

The main responsibility would be to ensure there are facilities to transport food, clothing, medicines and people.

ROLLING STOCK

The 200,000 persons working for Canada's railways and their some 200,000 pieces of rolling stock ranging from diesel locomotives to boxcars would come under federal control.

The federal transportation pool would also include the nation's 1,000,000 trucks, 15,000 buses, 3,500,000 cars, 200 commercial aircraft and 19,000 ships of over 15 tons.

Thousands of smaller aircraft would be taken over by the provinces and municipalities for such projects as fire-spotting, aerial photography and message-dropping.

Mr. Keddie, who was chief instructor and second in command of the Civil Defence College at Arnprior, Ont., before taking over his present post a year ago says the plan "has jelled."

His main concern now is to keep the plan—most of the details are secret—up to date.

"Legislation now is on the books in draft form that needs only to be signed by the Governor-General to become law."

The transport department has asked industry to supply executives to work out survival plans and to take over controls in the name of the government if an attack occurs.

"We're preparing for a way of life," says Mr. Keddie. "The conditions established after a nuclear attack could last 25 years."

ALREADY SELECTED

Most of the wartime directors of these services already have been selected and told what to do in event of attack. Each nominee has an alternate in case he doesn't live through the attack.

"We are planning now for the worst," says Mr. Keddie, a native of Ottawa who joined the RAF in 1932 and was an air commodore when he returned to Canada in 1957 to join the staff of the country's first civil defence organization.

He says there is "no possibility of Canada being obliterated." If an attack occurred, "there are vast open spaces where we can rehabilitate."

In A-Attack

Soldiers Told What to Do

By DON HANRIGHT

OTTAWA (CP) — Canadian soldiers are being trained to control the crowds that could build up during a national emergency, such as after nuclear attack.

It's a foreign subject to Canadian troops, so the training has been based on British experience in coping with ill-tempered mobs in the Middle East.

Army officers are being told, for example, that weapons should be brandished in front of a crowd only for the psychological effect and that officers "must not be stampeded" into ordering a return of fire from the crowd.

SURVIVAL ROLE

The training is part of the army's preparation for its survival role. A manual notes that any crowd gathering when food and shelter is scarce "is potentially aggressive and could become hostile."

"Under no circumstances will troops join in an exchange of heckling or make any reply to taunts or jeers from a crowd," the manual says.

DON'T THROW ROCKS

Detachments should not be posted where they cannot reasonably defend themselves from attacks made on individual soldiers or small groups.

Invariably an aggressive crowd will throw rocks, sticks or mud at any force that opposes it, the manual says. Troops are warned not to return the barrage.

What if members of the crowd set fire to buildings?

"Since a crowd cannot remain any closer to a fire than the troops, the situation may be turned to advantage by quickly deploying men from another flank, or from the rear.

NOT TOO HASTY

"When fire is used the officer commanding the troops must not be too hasty in using his force as firefighters. This may be what the leaders want."

And what if the crowd threatens to use explosives?

"If the threat is confirmed the only recourse is to withdraw temporarily and lay down a heavy concentration of chemicals, e.g. tear gas. If available, armored vehicles could be used to maintain control while a special squad deals with the situation."

SPECIAL CROP

The wild rice harvest in 1961 netted $275,000 to Indians in the Kenora-southern Manitoba region and around Peterborough, Ont.

BIG UN AGENCY

The World Health Organization has a regular medical and administrative staff of about 2,200 persons from more than 70 countries.

Commission Crackdown

Culprits Aplenty In B.C. Fund Fraud

VANCOUVER (CP)—A crackdown on people who cheat the unemployment insurance fund has found plenty of culprits in British Columbia.

William Begg, insurance commission lawyer, and a team of 16 sleuths last year studied 14,000 cases.

He says it's a strange experience—pinning down the violations of people often no different from others but nevertheless convinced the government is fair game for a few more dollars.

Once caught, they usually co-operate, although their immediate reaction is one of anger, not guilt.

Many are easy to find. Commission auditors turn up inconsistencies in applications and claim files. Police, social welfare, sales tax and income tax officials relay tips as well.

The commission's plainclothes men have a limited quarry. They can seek out only the person "who in relation of any claims or benefits makes a statement or representation that he knows to be false or misleading."

Thus the insurance recipient who removes her makeup and false teeth to discourage her hiring by a new employer is beyond Mr. Begg's scope.

170 CONVICTED

Of the 14,000 cases last year, 70 per cent turned out to be innocent, or as one of the investigators put it, "innocent enough." Most of the rest got off with a talking-to and an out-of-court settlement.

There were 180 others who went to court, 170 receiving jail sentences, fines or both.

This group included a cross-section of the labor force, hotel clerk, bar waiter, construction worker, door-to-door salesman and housewife.

Together with the ones who slipped away unnoticed or with a warning, they contributed to the $2,000,000-a-year fraud loss being suffered by the fund in B.C. alone.

Mr. Begg has developed a scheme to make cheating even more precarious.

He has formed a blitz squad of two to four investigators who make spot checks in an area even if there is no concrete evidence of skulduggery.

"It's strictly a fishing expedition," Mr. Begg says. "But it's surprising how some people will hang themselves."

Dig That Sucker

By M. V. CHESNUT, FRHS

ROSE SUCKER (F.R.McG., Victoria)—You say one shoot on your rose bush has shot up two feet taller than the rest of the bush and has borne no flowers, even though the other portions of the plant have bloomed prolifically. This sounds very much to me as though the tall shoot is a wild rose sucker springing up from the roots below the graft.

Nearly all the roses you buy today are grown on wild rose roots of one kind or another. There is a swelling on the main stem, usually an inch or so below the soil surface, that marks the junction between the highly bred topgrowth and the wild roots. Any shoots originating below this swelling must necessarily be wild, and if you let it go unchecked, all the strength from the roots will go into this wild topgrowth and the good portion will die out.

The thing to do is dig down and find the point of origin of the tall shoot and cut it off flush with the root, taking a thin slice of root along with it. Use a sharp knife, for the cleaner and smoother the cut, the less chance there will be for other suckers to arise from the same point on the roots. Cutting the sucker at ground level would do no good at all—you would get two or three suckers springing up for every one you cut down.

POTATO APPLES (E.W., East Sooke)—Those hard green "berries" you picked off and saved from your potato plants cannot be planted next year to grow potatoes. While they are seed pods, they are in a very immature condition, and the seeds in them wouldn't be ripe enough for sowing.

These "potato apples," as the seed pods are called, would have to turn red, then almost black, before the seeds within them were properly ripened and fit for drying and sowing, and this occurs very seldom in our climate. In any case it isn't a practicable proposition to grow a crop of potatoes from true seeds, although they are used when breeding new potato varieties.

I should point out these potato seed pods are poisonous, containing a dangerous narcotic drug called solanin.

ROOM DIVIDER PLANTER (T.A.W., Victoria)—You cannot plant up a room-divider planter permanently with flowering plants and expect them to remain gay and colorful the whole year round. No "plant' blooms continuously, and anything you might plant would be sure to have its less attractive phases. In your case, too, the planter is quite a distance from the nearest window, and the very poor light would make for indifferent performance even in the most persistent bloomers.

I think your best bet would be to rig up your planter as a purely temporary home for plants. Fill it with some inert material such as small gravel or vermiculite, and sink potted plants up to their rims in it. Keep a good reserve of colorful plants coming along in a sunny part of the house and use them to ring the changes fairly frequently in the planter. As each plant passes out of bloom, return it to its sunny windowsill to recuperate, replacing it in the planter with another.

LILAC SEED PODS (E.P., Duncan)—While it would pretty up your lilac bush and make it a bit more presentable to nip off the dead brown seed pods, it wouldn't have any beneficial effect upon the vigor or general health of the plant. To do any good along these lines, the spent flower heads should have been taken off before the plant had to undergo the exhausting process of making seeds.

Beyond the Fringe Star Tells ART BUCHWALD About—

Drinks with Button-Pushers

We had lunch with our good friend Peter Cook, one of the four stars of the British smash hit, Beyond the Fringe, which is just winding up a successful run in Washington.

"How do you like Washington?" we asked him.

"It's rather terrifying," Mr. Cook said. "I keep going to cocktail parties and meeting people who seem to have their fingers on 'the button' or very near it. The British keep their button-pushers much more in the background. I suppose if I came face to face with a British button-pusher, he might be even less impressive than an American one."

Mr. Cook attended his first presidential press conference while he was in Washington and he commented, "The questions were so bad, you couldn't expect the answers to be very good. But I was very impressed by the up-and-down movement of the newsmen, who were never quite sure when President Kennedy would finish a sentence. The president has a beautifully modulated voice and uses such an endless stream of phrases that nobody can be certain when he's going to stop. Once he's in a sentence, it's very difficult for him to emerge from it.

* * *

"But I must say, your president is much kinder than Mr. Macmillan. When Mr. Macmillan is asked stupid questions, he's brief to the point of rudeness. Your fellow seems most amiable about answering anything."

Mr. Cook was also interested in the White House's culture program.

"I suppose it's all right," he said. "The American approach to culture seems to be to give it snob appeal. If you show that the president takes a lively interest in the arts, even to the extent of importing them for his own living room, you may persuade the people to go out and see some."

"During the Eisenhower administration the healthy American said, 'I wouldn't have Robert Frost in my living room.' Now thanks to Mrs. Kennedy, the healthy American, or at least his wife, says, 'Call up Pablo Casals and see if he can have dinner with us.'"

When it comes to day to day life in America, Mr. Cook said he was enjoying it. "I do get nervous when I heard the world news on the radio has been brought to me by a tissue company. We feel in Britain the news should be brought to you on its own without help from anybody."

One other gripe Mr. Cook has is that American restaurants are so mean with their butter. "Is butter really so expensive here?" he asked us. "All I seem to be able to get is one pat with every meal. It's most annoying, particularly since I like to put dollops on my bread. Everyone gets so resentful when I ask for more."

Ailing Judy Keeps Going

By SHEILAH GRAHAM

HOLLYWOOD (NANA) — Judy Garland needs a good, long rest. She is now very tired from her extended movie session in England, and while she is doing only one show nightly in Las Vegas, that's plenty for the girl who puts everything she has into every number. Judy's recurring "illnesses" worry her friends and associates.

Jack Lemmon is a busy bridegroom. After his current Irma La Douce for Billy Wilder, he hops to Britain for his much-postponed Dangerous Silence, for Bob Parrish. New wife Felicia Farr, hoping for a family, will retire from her medium-carat career.

Brigitte Bardot refused $10,000 in cash to pose for the cover of Sammy Kaye's new album. "I am an actress, not a cover girl," cooed the cool sex symbol.

Lloyd Bridges taped "And the Angels Sing" with his eight-year-old daughter for the Christmas trade. . . . And Jeff Hayden, who has directed some of the segments in Lloyd's new TV show, told me, "Everyone loves Lloyd." Well, I'm glad he's coming out of the water after four years of that skin-diving series.

They were missing Jackie Gleason at Paramount when I lunched there yesterday. Jackie showed some of the younger stars what it means to be an old pro. He was at the studio for Papa's Delicate Condition, at 8 every morning, sometimes giving interviews while he made up.

Bob Hope says that so many of his old movies are shown on television that he can actually watch his hairline recede.

There won't be many movies made at Metro here until the money comes in from Mutiny on the Bounty and How the West was Won. The studio's other biggie, Brothers Grimm, is reported to be doing well. This is one of the big reasons for the slow down in Hollywood production. The big pictures have used up most of the available money.

Women Barbers of Japan

Fierce Massagee All Part of Service

By KIP COOPER

YOKOHAMA, Japan — I was dozing in the chair. The Japanese girl balled up her tiny fists and brought them down on the top of my head.

I sat bolt upright.

"You no like massagee?" she asked.

It was only one of the surprises awaiting a westerner in a Japanese barbet shop.

Most barbers here are women. Mine was about 5 feet tall and weighed in the vicinity of 100 pounds. But Patterson of Liston could learn something from her. A head and shoulder massage is part of your haircut. The shoulders are kneaded and your head is pounded until you're nearly numb. They say it is good for the circulation. I think it was invented by Japanese women to get even.

I had scarcely settled in the chair when an assistant barberess began clipping my fingernails. While she did this, she responded to staccato commands from the barber for scissors, clippers, hot towels, etc., and she watched every snip the barber made. This is part of her training.

Chairs are Western style, but the service is strictly Japanese.

As the barber cut, her assistant meticulously picked hairs off my brow and nose. She adjusted the electric fan on the floor so that it would blow up my pants legs.

"This keep you more cool," the barber said. It did.

When the barber finished, the assistant took me to a sink, rinsed my hair thoroughly, dried it and made me presentable for the street.

"How much?" I asked.

"Hyaku go-jyu yen," she said. "One hundred fifty yen (40 cents)."

I tried to give her a 30 yen tip.

"No sank you," said the barber, with a low bow. "That's satisfaction."

I think it's service, too.

Too bad it can't be exported.

Jaycee Cheque Aids University

Victoria's Junior Chamber of Commerce last night handed over a $25,000 gift for development of Victoria University.

Eric Charman, Jaycee president, presented a cheque for that amount to H. B. Elworthy, chairman of the Victoria University Development Board at the annual president's installation banquet.

The money, proceeds from this year's Jaycee fair plus a small amount from Junior Chamber reserves, will be used by the college to furnish a radio-isotope laboratory.

A provincial government matching grant will raise the total to $50,000.

Raising the money was the Jaycees' Victoria centennial project. In 1958, the year of the British Columbia centennial, the Jaycees donated a like amount for construction of changing houses for bathers at Hamsterley Park, Elk Lake.

Two Jaycees were presented with top Victoria Jaycee awards at the banquet.

No Beer Sales At Grocery Shop

Attorney-General Bonner says it's not likely the government will allow grocery store beer sales as recommended this week by the International Woodworkers of America CLC regional convention in Vancouver. "There is mixed reaction to this matter in the legislature and I don't foresee any change in the law," Mr. Bonner said Saturday.

Oak Bay Lives It Up

Salute to Victoria On Land and Sea

By HARVEY SHEPHERD

Tweed and trumpets made way for shirtsleeves and salt air yesterday when Oak Bay let down its hair in the slam-bang home stretch of a two-day salute to Victoria.

A crowd estimated at nearly 5,000 swarmed around the Oak Bay marina to cheer and participate in an afternoon of water-sports ranging from a distance swim to a predicted log boat race and two fish derbies—one for adults and one for children.

Eighteen greased swimmers plunged into the chilly waters of Oak Bay swimming between Jimmy Chicken Island and the Oak Bay mainland.

One youth had to be pulled from the water because of the cold but a man in his 30s, Walter Rother of 911 Island, finished the swim although he took twice as long as some competitors to do it.

A 17-year-old Oak Bay High School student, Bruce Parker, won the race, followed by Brooke George, also 17, and of Oak Bay High. Mike Collin was third.

Fastest female was Ellie Jane Bailey, 16, of Oak Bay High with Ruth Jorgensen, 15, second and Barb Heisterman third.

Forty-eight salmon weighed in after a dawn-to-1 p.m. salmon derby. A seven-pound 12-ounce salmon won top honors for Miss Johanne Riome of 2021 Kings Road.

Biggest non-salmon entry was an 11-pound eight-ounce codfish caught by Doug Mace of 1151 Roslin.

A 15-year-old Oak Bay High School student with a 25-horsepower outboard motor won the Victoria Outboard Club predicted-log race. Aiming for 22 minutes 35 seconds, John Gornall was minute 22 seconds too soon.

Wilf Hughes, with a 2:15 error, was club member with the best time and won the Clam-Digger-wheel trophy. John Skillings, a non-member, was out 1:35.

A one pound 11 ounce bass won the children's fishing derby for young Robert Downer of 2874 Orchard and a monster skate speared by Don Whittaker won a skin diving competition sponsored by the Bohemian Skin Diving Club.

"A" category singles horseshoe pitching competition was won by Ray Jago of Victoria with Gerry Vermiere of Youbou, B.C., and Alec Fisher of Courtenay taking the doubles. In "B" competition, W. J. Greive of Comox took singles honors and teamed with J. Jones of Comox to win the doubles.

Emergency Repairs? Sure, We Can Cover You

One of the things we like about Wawanesa Mutual is that it's very seldom a customer can ask for coverage that we can't provide. Take our Emergency Road Repairs policy. If your car suddenly breaks down, we'll cover the cost of towing or emergency repairs up to $25. You might not expect an insurance company to provide that type of coverage, but Wawanesa felt it was needed, so of course they made it available. It's only one of many extras that appear throughout Wawanesa's entire insurance program. If you feel your insurance doesn't quite cover all your needs, chances are Wawanesa can. Test us. Fun Outpaces Fish In Derby for Blind

If the success of a fishing trip is measured in the enjoyment of the fishermen, then Saturday's derby for the blind was a whopping success.

Only about half a dozen fish were caught by the 40 fishermen and women who took part in the derby, sponsored by the Capital City Yacht Club, but the unique outing was enough to make it all worth while.

Grand prize winner was D. McCauslane, whose fish was not weighed. Other prize winners included I. White, C. Street and Mrs. E. Collins.

Servants Seek Rights

Civil service employees' organizations from seven provinces are meeting here to chart a course of action to win for themselves the rights of collective bargaining and binding arbitration.

Secretary H. B. Hunter of the Canadian Federation of Government Employees' Organizations, meeting at the Empress Hotel, said yesterday the group does not intend to seek the right to strike.

It plans an intensive campaign this year for a royal commission type of hearing to probe its request. Federation officials will claim that labor unions will move in to organize certain segments of the civil service unless such rights are granted.

The 25 officers and delegates, plus 15 observers from the B.C. Government Employees' Association, today will explore means of establishing closer liaison with the three major civil service employee groups. Only Ontario and Quebec are not represented.

Proud, Reliant Slovaks Look Toward Canada

East, West Tied

Bright national costumes preserve heritage of Czechs and Slovaks.

By DAVID OANCIA
(Last of a Series)

BRATISLAVA, Czechoslovakia (CP) — The proud and independent Slovaks who form about one-third of this country's population of 14,000,000 like to talk of their connections with Canada.

Usually this takes the form of questions about the Canadian forests or mining and industrial centres such as Timmins, Windsor, Sudbury or Noranda.

During the three days I spent visiting this city on the Danube and the surrounding area I met scarcely a Slovak who hadn't some personal tie with North America. They talked of cousins in Winnipeg, sisters in Montreal or brothers and fathers who worked in the Canadian woods.

LIKE LUMBERJACK

Those who left for Canada and later returned have contributed some colorful phrases to the Slavonic language. When a man works hard, for example, he works "like a Canadian lumberjack."

In reply to questions about this, one Communist retorted: "You have only to compare what we had before with what we now have to see the falseness of the claim.

STILL NATIONALISTIC

Temperamentally the Czechs and Slovaks who make up this nation are almost as different as the English and Italians. The Czech is more reserved, calculating and dedicated to convention.

The Slovaks have a long tradition of Roman Catholicism. Their feeling of independence seems to come naturally from

Russians Protest Seizure

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union protested to the United States Saturday over the confiscation by Puerto Rican port authorities of a cargo of Cuban sugar en route to Russia.

In a note handed to U.S. Charge d'Affaires John M. McSweeney, the Soviet government demanded the return of the shipment to the Soviet Union and the payment of damages.

BRITISH SHIPMENT

The text of the note as broadcast by Moscow radio said the shipment had been seized when a British ship, the Streatham Hill bound from Cuba to the Soviet Union, put into San Juan for repairs.

The note said the shipment belonged to the Soviet Trading Organization Sovtorg, and described the incident as "an act of open arbitrariness."

ACCEPTS RESPONSIBILITY

"The United States which has jurisdiction over San Juan bears full responsibility for the unlawful actions of the Puerto Rican authorities," it added.

COURT ACTION

The 120,000-bag cargo was attached by court action in San Juan on Thursday to satisfy a Florida court judgment awarding the Terry Kane heavy machinery firm of Miami $933,978 damages for nationalization of its property in Cuba.

Words, No Action Over Cuba at UN

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP) — Cuba was a live issue Saturday as Secretary of State Dean Rusk headed for New York City to confer with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko and others here for the U.N. General Assembly.

But it was all words and no action. The United States on the one hand and Cuba and the Soviet Union on the other exchanged charges in the assembly's general debate. But none of them made any move to get a special debate such as would give the charges more prominence.

BUSY SCHEDULE

Among the foreign ministers he is scheduled to see are Subandrio of Indonesia Sunday morning, Lord Home of Britain Sunday afternoon, Masayoshi Ohira of Japan Monday noon and Gromyko Tuesday noon.

An official source disclosed meanwhile that Cuban chief delegate Mario Garcia-Inchaustegui had put himself down to speak in the general debate in the late afternoon of Oct. 1.

EVE OF TALKS

That is the eve of a two-day meeting of Latin American foreign ministers that the United States has called in Washington to discuss what to do about a buildup of Soviet arms and personnel in Cuba. Since Rusk must get back for that meeting he probably will miss the Cuban speech.

Regier Picked —Next Door

ABBOTSFORD (CP) — Robert Regier, who resigned his Burnaby-Coquitlam seat in Parliament to give New Democratic Party leader T. C. Douglas a chance to run in a by-election, was named Saturday night to be the party's candidate in the Fraser Valley constituency in the next federal general election.

Estes' Assets Bring Millions

EL PASO, Tex. (AP) — A federal referee in bankruptcy said Billie Sol Estes' assets Saturday for $5,800,000 principal and certain interest charges. Purchaser was Morris Jaffe of San Antonio, a man with varied business interests.

Where Are Sons Going?

PRINCETON (CP) — The population at Bromley Park appeared Saturday to be mysteriously and slowly diminishing.

Where once there were tents, now are empty spaces.

But officially, no such movement could be recognized. The senior police officer in this area was away for the weekend, and Mrs. Fanny Storgoff, the robust spokesman for the 1,300 Sons of Freedom Doukhobors who were camped at Bromley, maintained they were staying.

PROGRESS HALTED

Freedomites have been at Bromley for a week, peacefully established in the government site on the bank of the Similkameen River.

They had intended going to Agassiz in the Fraser Valley to be near scores of Doukhobor men jailed near there for acts of terrorism. Tuesday, progress of a trek from the Kootenay that started Sept. 2 was halted when a municipal bylaw was passed in the Agassiz area, saying the Doukhobors' presence constituted an emergency.

DOGS STATIONED

A police roadblock to stop the march anywhere west of Bromley has been maintained 24 hours daily. For five days dogs have been stationed there too, as an added deterrent.

But the Doukhobors may travel east, which they do to collect groceries and take baths in a nearby motel. Also, by continuing through the Okanagan Valley, it is an easy drive on to Kamloops, then back west along the Trans-Canada Highway to Hope and from there to any point in the lower mainland or Fraser Valley.

PREVENTS THEM

A direct route from Hope would not take the Sons through Agassiz where the bylaw prevents them from going.

Saturday, only three officers stood at the Bromley block, down seven from the usual 10 a shift.

Fanny said there will be prayer meetings today as there are every Freedomite Sunday.

Trekkers Told Children Must Be Sent to School

Marching Freedomite parents must send their children to school or face prosecution, Education Minister Leslie Peterson said last night.

The minister said letters have been sent to all Sons of Freedom parents whose children are absent from school.

These include those remaining in the Kootenays and others among the 1,300 Sons camped at Bromley Park, near Princeton.

The letter, said Mr. Peterson, "simply advised the parents they must send their children to school to comply with the law."

If they don't, they face prosecution under the Public Schools Act and the government, if necessary, can make the children wards of the child welfare department.

AT LOCAL LEVEL

This was the procedure followed several years ago when Freedomite children were placed in the New Denver school.

But prosecution, said the minister, would be "initiated at the local level."

"It is rarely started from the provincial office," he said.

And this poses the problem as to whether prosecution would be launched by the school board through which the transient Freedomites are passing, or the school board with jurisdiction over Krestova.

IMPROMPTU CLASSES

At the Bromley Park camp, some Freedomite children of school age have been attending impromptu classes taught by teen-agers who have Grade 8 or better education.

Mr. Peterson said whether these classes would be considered a replacement for actual school classes would be a matter for the courts to decide.

Veteran MLA Plans to Retire

VANCOUVER (CP) — Arthur Turner, 74-year-old dean of the B.C. legislature, said Saturday night he will not seek re-election when his present term as member for Vancouver East expires.

Vatican Bomb Fizzles

VATICAN CITY (AP) — A small incendiary bomb exploded harmlessly Saturday in St. Peter's Basilica, less than three weeks before the Roman Catholic ecumenical council opens in the largest Christian church in the world.

Vatican security guards shortly afterwards found a second detonator in the Basilica, but no explosives were attached to it.

PUFF OF SMOKE

The guards said the first device, a bottle filled with fluid, was found by a workman. They said the workman accidentally knocked the bottle over and it exploded "with a puff of smoke."

It was the second device to explode in St. Peter's in slightly more than two months. No one was injured either time and damage was negligible.

PAPER-WRAPPED

Prior to the report by security guards, the Vatican press office said two paper-wrapped parcels containing inflammable or explosive material had been found.

Pope John XXIII expressed shock, and Vatican sources said the incident might indicate a possible intimidation campaign against the Ecumenical Council of the Roman Catholic Church opening here Oct. 11.

Rebel Troops Gaining In Argentina

BUENOS AIRES (UPI)—Rebel army units won four battles over troops loyal to Argentina's ousted military leadership in Buenos Aires yesterday.

One other battle was fought in the provinces. Rebel headquarters reported at least three persons killed and up to 122 injured in the fighting.

Unconfirmed reports indicated the loyalist commanders were regrouping their forces southwest of the city.

CIVIL WAR

Fighting that moved Argentina into a civil war between opposing elements of the military erupted at four main points in Buenos Aires—Constitution Plaza, Avellaneda Park, Chacabuco Park, and the city's auto racing track.

The fighting primarily involved the armed forces so far and not the civilian population.

British-built Gloster Meteor jets carried out an intense bombardment of loyalist forces in the Chacabuco Park area which was also reported under heavy rebel tank and artillery fire.

FIRE RETURNED

Loyalist artillery there returned the fire but rebel ground troops began moving in against them.

The fighting here broke out in force at Constitution Square and raged for an hour and five

Argentine Briefing

By UPI

Argentina's civil war spread to the parks and the streets of the capital Saturday and the first serious casualty figures were reported. The situation at a glance:

● The opposing forces: The Blue or rebel forces, headed by Gen. Juan Carlos Ongania, and the troops loyal to ousted army commander-in-chief Gen. Juan Carlos Lorio.

● The issues: Ongania's faction wants immediate elections to prevent the possibility of military dictatorship. It refuses to accept the leadership of Lorio or the resigned secretary of war, Gen. Jose Cornejo.

Lorio's faction believes elections now would threaten the nation with a Communist or Peronist takeover and wants to postpone the voting and keep a strong military hand in the government.

● Military strength: The rebels control the nation's major military base, the Campo de Mayo, 20 miles outside the capital, and the army's only tank division. They also won the support of the Seventh Air Force Brigade, equipped with British Gloster jet fighters.

The navy thus far has remained neutral. The Loyalists have been handicapped by their lack of armor and air support and have had to battle tanks with machineguns and use anti-aircraft artillery as improvised anti-tank weapons.

● Political strength: President Jose Guido Friday withdrew his support from loyalist leaders Lorio and Gen. Bernardino Labayru, Lorio's chief of staff, ordering all troops to return to their barracks, an order that both sides ignored. Lorio, Labayru and War Secretary Cornejo also ignored their dismissals by Guido.

● Behind the scenes: Former dictator Juan Peron, living in luxurious exile in Spain. It was the Peronist gains in last spring's elections, the first the Peronists were allowed to contest since the dictator's ouster in 1955, that led to the military pressure that forced the dismissal of President Arturo Frondizi. Guido was put in office in his stead to rule at the sufferance of the military.

Rolls to Record

Flashing winning smile after breaking women's Canadian roller derby endurance record at the Esquimalt Sports Centre is Sherron Pineau, 18, of 1310 Burleith. She skated continuously for 18 hours and 15 minutes, or about 162 miles, in breaking old record of 18 hours set in Corner Brook, Nfld., in 1958.

Tito Top Target

Chinese Revive Tiff with Russia

TOKYO (AP)—Red China turned its ideological guns on so-called "modern revisionists" Saturday in what looked like a new round in its quarrel with the Soviet Union.

The attack, broadcast by Peking Radio, coincided with similar blasts during the week by Communist Albania which follows the Red Chinese line.

THREE CHARGES

Quoting from the People's Daily newspaper, Peking Radio accused President Tito of Yugoslavia of betraying Marxist-Leninism, consorting with "U.S. imperialists" and being a counter-revolutionary.

Chinese Communist criticism of what Peking considers weak Soviet policy has often been cloaked under attacks on the Yugoslav leader.

HAS NOT CHANGED

Tito — and "other revisionists" — incorrectly assume the "predatory and aggressive nature of imperialism" has changed, the broadcast said.

The Albanian Communist regime, in open disgrace with Moscow since last year, pulled no punches in broadcasts denouncing both Premier Khrushchev and Tito as revisionists.

Algerians Organize 'Rat Hunt'

ALGIERS, Sept. 22 (UPI) — Troop trains rolled in from western Algeria Saturday with reinforcements for Algerian army forces engaged in a massive "rat hunt" for guerrilla opposition to strongman Ahmed Ben Bella around Algiers.

As the military swept through the surrounding Mitidja Plain, new charges of "dictatorship" were fired at Ben Bella and his political bureau.

Leaflets accused the political bureau of preparing a "police state" with support from abroad.

Tory Foes Dared to Vote No

SOREL, Que. (CP)—Liberal Leader Pearson challenged the other two opposition groups Saturday night to join forces with his followers and topple the Conservative government at the first opportunity after Parliament opens Thursday.

Addressing local Liberal supporters in French, he said it is the duty of all members of the opposition to vote against the Diefenbaker government which had lost the confidence of 63 per cent of the electorate in the June 18 federal election.

"A member of the opposition," Mr. Pearson said, "could not therefore support the present government without betraying the mandate he has just received from the people.

"In my opinion, they have no choice; they must simply respect and reaffirm the verdict of their constituents."

He said Real Caouette, deputy Social Credit leader, said in a recent television interview that he would vote against the government if a no confidence motion were introduced.

Naturally," Mr. Pearson went on, "we cannot be sure that Mr. Caouette would take the same stand today."

The Liberal Chieftain repeated his pledge to introduce a no-confidence motion during the eight-day throne speech debate that is customarily held at the beginning of the session.

His group of 100 MPs would press for a vote before any other business is transacted in Parliament. They would resist any government move to interrupt the debate for the introduction of legislation or spending estimates, he said.

The minority Conservative government is outnumbered 148 to 116 by the three opposition parties.

He said a new election would be mainly a race between Liberals and Conservatives. He was not afraid of the outcome because people had learned that a Conservative triumph meant austerity.

The Social Credit upsurge in Quebec had surprised everyone, but this "temporary situation" would not be repeated in the next election if Liberals learned from this year's "lesson."

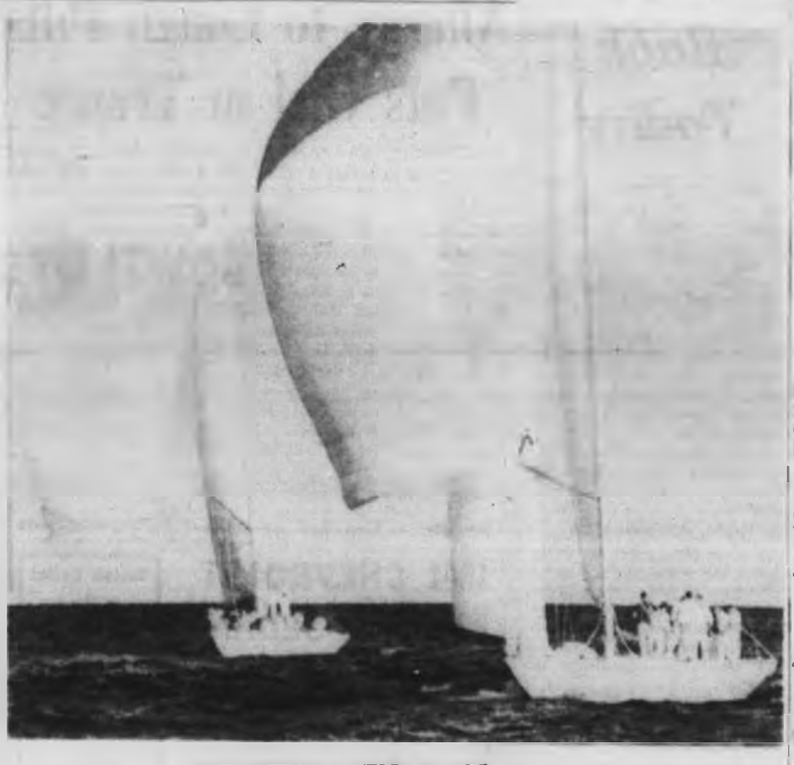

The NDP had definitely been chased out of Saskatchewan and had temporarily replaced Social Credit in British Columbia.

The voters of Quebec who supported Social Credit thereby helped to maintain the Conservative government in power.

"In this true sense, a vote for Caouette is a vote for Diefenbaker."

He said Social Credit supporters are realizing that the party has no chance of establishing itself in Canada and that it is the ally, consciously or not, of the Conservative party.

Sandown Park's Biggest Day —Betting, Track Records Fall

By JIM TANG

Desert Fire returned to Sandown Park on a record-breaking day yesterday and promptly showed that he is here to defend the horse-of-the-meet honors he won last year.

The eight-year-old gelding made his first Sandown start of the season in the featured Times Handicap against a fine field and not only won as he pleased but cut almost two seconds off the track record for the mile and 70 yards set by Severance on Oct. 1, 1960.

The time of 1:14 2-5 was one and four-fifths second better than the previous best time for the distance at Sandown and made the $4.70 straight payoff look like an overlay.

But Desert Fire had to share the spotlight with a four-year-old filly and 5,287 bettors who jammed the mutuel windows to set a new single-day betting record for Sandown.

Ky Look, facing what was the best field of sprinters ever assembled for one race at Sandown, proved what those who knew about breeding had been saying by taking the invitational handicap that was the sixth race and setting a track standard for the six furlongs.

Starting on the outside of the seven-horse field was no handicap at all for the Kentucky-bred filly. Jockey Charlie Ulrich asked her for speed at the break. She gave it to get to the front and was in front by four clear lengths at the finish.

Catching Milady Pleases near the finish but making no impression on the winner was Rebel Lea while Turk's Boy, also moving in the stretch just missed getting show money.

PUSHES LEADER

Milady Pleases, who last her track record of 1.11 3-5, pushed Ky. Look until they came out of the backstretch to help the winner cut a fifth of a second off her mark.

It was the kind of racing, and on a perfect day for racing, which deserved support. And it got it. With favorites winning five races, including the second, third and fourth, and getting in the money in the other three events, it created perfect conditions for the mutuels.

LONG LINEUPS

And they hummed, with long lineups for every race. When the adding up was done, the $135,734 bet yesterday was about a $1,000 more than was bet on Thanksgiving Day, 1960 and $7,370 more than was bet on the same day a year ago.

Only Ky. Look, an overlay as too many punters took into account her first start at Sandown, in the Colonist Handicap over a mile last Saturday, and the No. 7 pole position, and Pay Hike managed to post double-figure win returns on the board.

Ky. Look returned $10.70 while Pay Hike, who came from last place in the last three furlongs to win by about an inch over pace-setting Eastern Scout in the 11 furlong marathon, paid $16.10.

Roc and Noc, Silver Mint, Somedrive and the odds-on Davendel joined Desert Fire as winning favorites. Tomander was beaten a head in the first race, Hasty Hawk in the marathon and Milady Pleases in the sprint feature finished third.

Weatherly Wins by 26 Seconds

By WILL GRIMSLEY

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — Defender Weatherly stood off a dramatic closing surge by Gretel and narrowly beat the gallant Australian challenger Saturday by 26 seconds — the closest America's Cup finish in history—for a 3-1 lead in the series.

A floating gallery of about 800 craft saw Weatherly's canny skipper, Emil (Bus) Mosbacher send his blue-hulled queen of sea racers into a 340-yard lead on the opening eight-mile beat into the wind, then call on all his sailing wizardry to withstand a strong Gretel challenge on the final two legs of the 24-mile triangle.

Gretel, handled masterfully by 46-year-old Jock Sturrock, chopped Weatherly's commanding lead in half on the second eight-mile lap—a beam reach across the southerly wind under spinnaker headsails — and almost caught the American sloop on the final leg.

The first 40 minutes of the race, in moderate winds, provided a thrilling how-to-how duel. Then Mosbacher moved Weatherly to the front. Pointing higher toward the wind and going faster, the U.S. sloop turned the first weather mark with a lead of 1 minute, 26 seconds.

Sturrock cut the lead on the second leg — a beam reach across the wind—with colorful spinnakers flying, and then engaged Weatherly in a stirring war of tactics over the final eight-mile stretch.

The pulsating finish brought an ear-shattering roar of cheers, whistles and horn blasts of tribute from the spectator fleet.

Lions' Playoff Hopes Dim After 26-14 Loss to Riders

REGINA — Playing almost brilliantly on occasion, but not often enough to make up for their many lapses, B.C. Lions had their Western Conference playoff hopes all but ended here Saturday night as they took a 26-14 beating from Saskatchewan Rough Riders in a Canadian Football League game played before 12,283 fans.

Back in their accustomed cellar position, three points behind the third-place Riders, the Lions have enough games left to easily make up the difference. But three of their seven remaining games are against Winnipeg Blue Bombers, two against the improving Edmonton Eskimos, and one each against the Riders and Calgary Stampeders.

Riders won last night by the simple method of taking full advantage of the many B.C. miscues, mental and physical.

They scored two converted touchdowns in the first half of the first quarter. The first came in three plays after Tom Larscheid fumbled after running five yards to the Lions' 27 yard line on the first play from scrimmage. The second came after Bob Schloredt made a bad punt — only 21 yards — from inside his end zone, and the Lions were penalized 15 yards for not giving the receiver the stipulated minimum of five yards.

Ray Purdin, plunging for 10 and four yards, got the touchdowns and Reg Whitehouse converted.

For the rest of the first half and the early minutes of the third quarter, the Lions played outstanding football. They tied it at 14-14 before half-time on a 58-yard touchdown play between Joe Kapp and Mack Burton and a 56-yard march which took eight plays and ended with Nub Beamer crashing for the last two yards.

Taking the kickoff to start the second half, the Lions got within 20 yards in a drive which saw Kapp keep the Rider defence off balance with a good assortment of plays. Then Grant had a field-goal try blocked for the second time in the game, the Riders dribbled the ball almost to midfield.

Riders settled for a single point but got the ball back two plays later as Gene Wlasiuk intercepted on the B.C. 40-yard line. The Riders made it with two passes around an eight-yard loss, the last a 28-yarder from Bob Ptacek to Bill Gray at the end zone.

Whitehouse converted to make it 22-14, and the Lions were through. Schloredt got two more short punts away, the Lions were again penalized for no yards on one of them and while the defensive team performed nobly, Kapp couldn't get his big offence rolling again.

May Play

Unsigned and somewhat undecided, Doug Harvey arrived at New York Ranger's training camp in Vancouver yesterday saying he will play this season "only if I can help the club. Otherwise I'll go home." Harvey may be in lineup when Rangers play Portland Buckaroos Monday at 8:30 at Memorial Arena.

Yanks, Dodgers, Too Back Towards Series

New York Yankees are backing into a world series almost as fast as they used to sprint their way there.

Looking anything but champions to be, the Yankees again gained ground by losing yesterday as they reached the stage where two wins in their final six games, two Minegota defeats or one win and a Minnesota loss would clinch.

The American League champions were again upended by Chicago White Sox, 4-1, while Minnesota lost again and Los Angeles are already out of it and thinking about the chance that was theirs.

Since Aug. 23 when the Yankees appeared to have clinched matters with a second straight win over the Angels, the champions have won 15 games and lost 14. But the Twins are also 15-14 for the same period and the Angels no better than 12-15.

Nor have the Los Angeles Dodgers, the almost certain world series opponents for the Yankees, looked much better.

In the last six weeks the Dodgers have done no better than 21-18, no pennant-winning pace, but the San Francisco Giants missed their chance, too, by only gaining a game and a half.

They dropped four games back yesterday when Houston Colts scored two ninth-inning runs to win, 6-5. The Dodgers moved within four victories of clinching by taking St. Louis Cardinals, 4-1.

Cincinnati Reds were beaten, 2-1, by Philadelphia Phillies, the hottest club in either league for the past five weeks. The defeat officially eliminated the defending champions from the National League race.

Alouettes Tie With Esks

MONTREAL — Montreal Alouettes returned two kicks from their own end zone in the final seconds here yesterday to earn an 18-18 tie with Edmonton Eskimos in their interlocking Canadian Football League game before 19,129 fans.

Tommy-Joe Coffey had two good shots at winning it for the Esks in what was about the only exciting minute in one of the season's dullest games.

With 40 seconds left, Coffey punted from the Alouette 20-Yard line. Als' Larry Hickman booted it back, but Montreal was called for no yards on the receiver and Coffey got another chance from the 13-yard line. Even then he couldn't make it as Paul Fedor just managed to dribble a bouncing kick out of the end zone as the final gun sounded.

Quebec's Bid for Power Leaf of Strachan's Book?

CAPITAL REPORT

If B.C. Opposition Leader Robert Strachan is still something more than a hop, skip and jump away from appropriating the premier's plush office, it was obvious last week that he had at least borrowed Mr. Bennett's smile.

And it wasn't the premier's "let's-all-be-buddies" smile. It was the one that usually accompanies the digestion of a little mouse.

Mr. Strachan had just witnessed the Quebec government's approach to public utility expropriation and it was pretty obvious Liberal Premier Lesage did not borrow a leaf from B.C.'s set of take-over ground rules.

The Quebec plan—seek a mandate from the people and open avenues of arbitration for the price—could easily have come from Mr. Strachan's own pocket.

Early in 1960 he presented to the legislature the traditional CCF motion calling for BCE expropriation under the Public Power Act, a means which guarantees arbitration. Later the same year when Mr. Bennett called a provincial election Mr. Strachan and his CCF supporters sought a mandate from the people to take over the big power utility.

Simultaneously, Mr. Bennett and the Social Credit party sought a mandate for free enterprise—and got it.

Undeterred, Mr. Strachan on March 27, 1961, again presented a motion before the legislature calling for BCE expropriation by means of the Public Power Act. With its free-enterprise ballots still leaving ink stains in the pocket linings of 32 Socred MLAs, the government agreed to consider it—and what happened next is now history.

The government expropriated, but not under the Power Act, and then went on to try to close one door after another to avoid any legal meddling with the terms.

At this point, with the Quebec plan now out in the open, the casual observer would be ready to stand Mr. Bennett in the corner while Mr. Strachan delivers the valedictory oration to a hero-worshiping class of political students.

But lest the Opposition leader start to mount the podium it might be pointed out that graduation day is not quite at hand.

The proof of the utility expropriation pudding is truly in the eating, and so far the Lesage government has merely indicated that its mouth waters.

Hoots and catcalls are all that Premier Bennett has earned so far with his statement that he took over the BCE in the only fair way, but they don't seem to come from people who lend much credence to the principle that fairness is a two-edged sword.

The method of the BCE takeover was, for all its apparent invasion of the rights of shareholders, consistent with its motive.

Once he had embraced the principle that the BCE had to be taken over for the common good, Mr. Bennett could hardly have based the ground rules on any other principle. His use of the word fair means fair to the shareholders and equally fair to the people who have to foot the bill.

Mr. Lesage has so far been fair to the shareholders but a lot of water is going to go through the turbines before expropriation becomes a fait accompli, and the shares of one of the public utilities concerned have already shown a sharp increase.

It is conceivable that by the time the electorate expresses its wish the whole subject will be academic — the price, the legal barriers and the propaganda barrage having made the game worth somewhat less than the candle.

If the Quebec gambit achieves public ownership at terms both fair to the shareholders and fair to the public, Mr. Strachan will indeed have scored a major point over his Socred adversaries.

But if this admirable approach fails in its purpose, future governments faced with similar situations can hardly be blamed if they consign it to that bottomless bin labelled "good ideas that didn't work."

Yemenites Granted Amnesty

AMMAN, Jordan (AP)—The new Imam of Yemen has declared an amnesty for all political prisoners and asked refugees to come home. The absolute ruler also lifted taxes for this year, abolished feudal mortgage laws and granted pay increases to the armed force.

Far More Than Parking Involved in CIDC Pact

By IAN STREET

CITY HALL COMMENT

Prospects are remote indeed that either Victoria or Saanich will break its engagement with the Capital Improvement District Commission and remove the ban on curbside parking that was a condition of the beautification project for Douglas Street north of the Roundabout.

This would entail, first, return of $80,000 paid by the CIDC in grants for work on the project already carried out in the case of the city; and approximately $70,000 in the case of Saanich.

Also, far more important in the long run, any such move on the part of one or both municipalities involved would certainly jeopardize the working agreement between provincial government and local municipalities which resulted in formation of CIDC.

Objective of the CIDC and reasons behind its formation by the government in the spring of 1956 are sometimes forgotten.

One of these occasions when memory appeared to fail was during the last few months when small firms located on north Douglas claimed to have lost business because of the parking ban.

Local governments are sensitive to this kind of pressure, and rightly so, but it appears almost certain now that the ban will remain in effect.

The general philosophy behind the formation of the CIDC covered two main objectives: it was supposed to do for British Columbia's capital city those things which a commercial city would not do; and by carrying out the beautification projects this entailed to preserve and accentuate the individuality of Victoria as a tourist centre.

Deputy minister of municipal affairs J. Everett Brown, who heads CIDC, in the past has defined its function as that of providing "the frosting on the cake."

In keeping with these objectives, CIDC decided more than a year ago to promote beautification of north Douglas as the main entrance to Victoria.

So far it has poured some $150,000 into the project which included boulevard construction, tree-planting and flower boxes.

Easing of traffic congestion on this heavily travelled section of Douglas was only a secondary consideration in banning curbside parking on both sides of the main artery, according to the CIDC.

"The real reason was not so much to speed the flow of traffic," a CIDC spokesman said this week, "as to give Victoria a unique entrance, completely different from Kingsway in Vancouver or Highway 99 into Seattle which are cluttered with commercial developments."

Naturally, the CIDC had no desire to hurt small businessmen located on this section of Douglas, and it gave several months' warning of impending restrictions to allow them to make arrangements for off-street parking for their customers.

There is some doubt, however, in the minds of planners whether provision of off-street parking will save most of these small businesses which once flourished under different circumstances, but now appear to be out of place as land values soar and traffic grows heavier.

Jail-Weary Accused Suspends Own Term

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (UPI)—Willie Hill Jr. is one of the best customers Mecklenburg county recorder's court has had.

Therefore, Judge Winfred Ervin allows Willie to set his own sentence.

Willie, an elderly Negro, was hauled into court Friday for the 18th time. The charge, the same: Drunk in public.

First came the customary plea of guilty. Ervin reared back to see what the sentence would be.

Willie deliberated.

"I'm going to ask for a suspended sentence," he said. "It's the first time I've ever asked to be let go."

Willie explained that he has grown weary of prison—with few interruptions, his home for the past 16 years.

He got it.

Immunity Wears Off

Smallpox Vaccination a Must For Overseas Travellers

By JOSEPH MOLNER, MD

A traveller from Asia (reports the magazine "Modern Medicine") arrived in London, then became ill. Smallpox!

Within three weeks, 11 cases of confirmed smallpox occurred. Six victims died.

This is the whole answer to the complaints people make about having to get smallpox vaccinations before going abroad. (Well, strictly speaking you can go abroad without the shot, but you can't get back into the United States and Canada without proof of having had such a vaccination within three years.)

WEARS OFF

People often say, "But I've been vaccinated for smallpox. I can show you the scar."

If they only knew how many adults show a "take" they would change their minds. For immunity gradually wears off, and having been vaccinated as a child doesn't mean that you are still safe. When the repeated vaccination "takes," it is proof that you were not immune any longer.

Many of the nations of Europe and Central Asia have sporadic cases of smallpox.

We on this continent are being protected by this rigid regulation concerning vaccination. If a case did get in, it could spread!

The World Health Organization is devoting great effort to keeping track globally of cases of smallpox, cholera, plague, typhus, relapsing fever.

We are today on the brink of new vaccines for virus diseases, the polio vaccine and the flu vaccines being, it now seems, forerunners of others within the realm of possibility.

Dear Dr. Molner: I am 29 and want to have my right eye straightened. It has been turned in all my life. I want it corrected more than anything in the world, but could the operation endanger my life?—P.A.T.

This type of surgery rates as minor and is not dangerous. It is just about possible to guarantee that the eye will not only look better but see better, too.

Dear Dr. Molner: Since having a cold, I have not been able to smell or taste anything. Is this a serious condition or can it be cured?—MRS. L.P.

It is not too unusual following flu or a hard cold, and the sense of smell returns when it gets ready to do so. Not much can be done to speed it up.

Dear Dr. Molner: I have a friend who eats chewing gum, just like eating candy, from 5 to 15 sticks a day. I tell her it will kill her. She says she needs it to settle her nerves.—A.L.

No, it won't kill her. Why don't you find a confirmed alcoholic to worry about, and stop trying to frighten the gum out of your friend?

an uninhibited life in the hills and mountains. They are more open and more curious about any stranger who may happen to be in their midst.

Languages are virtually the same in the Czech and Slovak regions, but the Slovaks strive hard to preserve their linguistic heritage. Newspapers, schools and other institutions use Slovakian throughout.

HARBOR FEELING

Some view this as a concession by the central authorities in Prague to the feeling of Slovakian nationalism that has always been a characteristic of the region. The Slovaks still harbor the feeling that throughout history some outsider or other has always taken advantage of them. By outsiders they meant Hungarians, Austrians, Germans and even Czechs.

The Communists speak of Slovakia as the "land that expelled its children." Before the war, this region was backward. Farms were small and primitive. The economy just couldn't support everyone.

MANY EMIGRATED

"Next to the Irish, we had the highest number of emigrants," said a senior Slovakian planner.

"Before the war, every second young man left the region—usually for Canada, the United States or the Argentine."

The Communist planners concluded the only way to fight this trend—quite apart from sealing the frontier—was to bring industry to the area.

ALMOST EVEN

"Our geographical position helped us in Slovakia," the planner said. "We are on the route which most of our foreign trade follows—toward the Soviet Union and the other socialist countries."

The planner gave these figures to show how the Communists have transformed Slovakia's economy:

Before the war the ratio of farm to industrial workers was eight to one; now its 3.1 to 4.3. Total production is 11.5 times greater. Slovakia turns out 18.5 per cent of Czechoslovakia's industrial goods compared with seven per cent before the war. The industrial labor force in the region has grown from 403,000 from the pre-war figure of 105,000.

SEPARATISM DENIED

The Communists strenuously deny that there has been any resurgence of Slovak nationalism such as that used by Hitler to set up the Slovak state under German tutelage.

Speculation by Western observers that separatist tendencies had developed followed a speech by Karold Bacilek, first secretary of the Slovak Communist party.

He claimed that vestiges of "bourgeois nationalism," "revisionism" and even "clerical fascism" of the type responsible for the establishment of the separate state during the war had infiltrated many parts of Slovak national life.

MORE POWERFUL

This Western view was that Bacilek's uninhibited condemnation indicated rapid economic development together with a reaction against Communist control has given traditional nationalism a modern and more powerful base.

Labor Undecided

U.K. Liberals Join Tories In Favor of Market Plan

LLANDUDNO, Wales (UPI)—Britain's third party—the Liberals—enthusiastically joined Prime Minister Harold Macmillan's Conservatives Saturday in the drive to carry the country into the European Common Market.

Liberal leader Jo Grimond told the closing session of his party's annual convention that Macmillan is a Johnny-come-lately to the common market idea—but is nevertheless right.

LABOR ON FENCE

Grimond thus sealed what political observers called an unofficial Liberal-Conservative alliance on the market issue. Labor party leader Hugh Gaitskell and most of his backers remained sitting on the fence—neither wholly supporting nor wholly rejecting Britain joining the continental trade bloc.

His enthusiastic followers wildly cheered Grimond when he accused Macmillan of clinging to office at any price.

But the Liberals—who hold only seven of the House of Commons' 630 seats—also gave Grimond a standing ovation when he accused Gaitskell of nit-picking on the issue.

LESS LAND

India, with a population greater than the United States and Soviet Union combined, has only one-third the land area of the U.S.

Grimond said Gaitskell, who has called for a general election to decide the issue, is timid on the momentous decision Britain must take, and added of Labor leadership:

"They are the only generals in history who have ever attempted to ride into battle sitting securely astride a fence . . . Now they have even fallen off the fence, rather limply on the wrong side," he said.

OLD MAN'S CLUB

Grimond also poked fun at the commonwealth attitude toward British participation in Europe.

"It is sometimes the Commonwealth and not Europe which gives the impression of an old man's club putting up the shutters against the young world outside."

When a three-minute standing ovation ended, the assembly sang "For he's a jolly good fellow" and gave Grimond three cheers.

Small jib staysail can be seen behind spinnaker of Weatherly as U.S. 12-metre sloop crosses finish line just 26 seconds ahead of Australia's Gretel in America's Cup challenge race off Newport, R.I., Saturday. U.S. leads best-of-seven series, 3-1. — (AP Photofax.)

Weatherly Wins by 26 Seconds

By WILL GRIMSLEY

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — Defender Weatherly stood off a dramatic closing surge by Gretel and narrowly beat the gallant Australian challenger Saturday by 26 seconds — the closest America's Cup finish in history—for a 3-1 lead in the series.

A floating gallery of about 800 craft saw Weatherly's canny skipper, Emil (Bus) Mosbacher send his blue-hulled queen of sea racers into a 340-yard lead on the opening eight-mile beat into the wind, then call on all his sailing wizardry to withstand a strong Gretel challenge on the final two legs of the 24-mile triangle.

Gretel, handled masterfully by 46-year-old Jock Sturrock, chopped Weatherly's commanding lead in half on the second eight-mile lap—a beam reach across the southerly wind under spinnaker headsails — and almost caught the American sloop on the final leg.

The first 40 minutes of the race, in moderate winds, provided a thrilling bow-to-bow duel. Then Mosbacher moved Weatherly to the front. Pointing higher toward the wind and going faster, the U.S. sloop turned the first weather mark with a lead of 1 minute, 26 seconds.

Sturrock cut the lead on the second leg — a beam reach across the wind—with colorful spinnakers flying, and then engaged Weatherly in a stirring war of tactics over the final eight-mile stretch.

The pulsating finish brought an ear-shattering roar of cheers, whistles and horn blasts of tribute from the spectator fleet.

Lions' Playoff Hopes Dim After 26-14 Loss to Riders

REGINA—Playing almost brilliantly on occasion, but not often enough to make up for their many lapses, B.C. Lions had their Western Conference playoff hopes all but ended here Saturday night as they took a 26-14 beating from Saskatchewan Rough Riders in a Canadian Football League game played before 12,283 fans.

Back in their accustomed cellar position, three points behind the third-place Riders, the Lions have enough games left to easily make up the difference. But three of their seven remaining games are against Winnipeg Blue Bombers, two against the improving Edmonton Eskimos, and one each against the Riders and Calgary Stampeders.

Riders won last night by the simple method of taking full advantage of the many B.C. miscues, mental and physical.

They scored two converted touchdowns in the first half of the first quarter. The first came in three plays after Tom Larscheid fumbled after running five yards to the Lions' 27-yard line on the first play from scrimmage. The second came after Bob Schloredt made a bad punt—only 24 yards from inside his end zone, and the Lions were penalized 15 yards for not giving the receiver the stipulated minimum of five yards.

Ray Purdin, plunging for 10 and four yards, got the touchdowns and Reg Whitehouse converted.

For the rest of the first half and the early minutes of the third quarter, the Lions played outstanding football. They tied it at 14-14 before half-time on a 59-yard touchdown play between Joe Kapp and Mack Burton and a 36-yard march which took eight plays and ended with Nub Beamer crashing for the last two yards.

Taking the kickoff to start the second half, the Lions got within 20 yards in a drive which saw Kapp keep the Rider defence off balance with a good assortment of plays. Then Grant had a field-goal try blocked for the second time in the game, the Riders dribbled the ball almost to midfield.

Riders settled for a single point but got the ball back two plays later as Gene Wlasiuk intercepted on the B.C. 40-yard line. The Riders made it with two passes around an eight-yard loss, the last a 28-yarder from Bob Ptacek to Bill Gray in the end zone.

Whitehouse converted to make it 22-14, and the Lions were through. Schloredt got two more short punts away, the Lions were again penalized for no yards on one of them and while the defensive team performed nobly, Kapp couldn't get his big offence rolling again.

Alouettes Tie With Esks

MONTREAL—Montreal Alouettes returned two kicks from their own end zone in the final seconds here yesterday to earn an 18-18 tie with Edmonton Eskimos in their interlocking Canadian Football League game before 19,129 fans.

Tommy-Joe Coffey had two good shots at winning it for the Esks in what was about the only exciting minute in one of the season's dullest games.

With 40 seconds left, Coffey punted from the Alouette 20-yard line. Als' Larry Hickman booted it back, but Montreal was called for no yards on the receiver and Coffey got another chance from the 13-yard line. Even then he couldn't make it, as Paul Fedor just managed to dribble a bouncing kick out of the end zone as the final gun sounded.

Yanks, Dodgers, Too Back Towards Series

New York Yankees are backing into a world series almost as fast as they used to sprint their way there.

Looking anything but champions to be, the Yankees again gained ground by losing yesterday as they reached the stage where two wins in their final six games, two Minnesota defeats or one win and a Minnesota loss would clinch.

The American League champions were again upended by Chicago White Sox, who had two late three-run innings in a 6-2 win. But Minnesota lost again and Los Angeles are already out of it and thinking about the chance that was theirs.

Since Aug. 23, when the Yankees appeared to have clinched matters with a second straight win over the Angels, the champions have won 13 games and lost 14. But the Twins are also 15-14 for the same period and the Angels no better than 12-15.

Nor have the Los Angeles Dodgers, the almost certain world series opponents for the Yankees, looked much better.

In the last six weeks the Dodgers have done no better than 21-18, no pennant-winning pace, but the San Francisco Giants missed their chance, too, by only gaining a game and a half.

They dropped four games back yesterday when Houston Colts scored two ninth-inning runs to win, 6-5. The Dodgers moved within four victories of clinching by taking St. Louis Cardinals, 4-1.

Cincinnati Reds were beaten, 2-1, by Philadelphia Phillies, the hottest club in either league for the past five weeks. The defeat officially eliminated the defending champions from the National League race.

Sandown Park's Biggest Day —Betting, Track Records Fall

By JIM TANG

Desert Fire returned to Sandown Park on a record-breaking day yesterday and promptly showed that he is here to defend the horse-of-the-meet honors he won last year.

The eight-year-old gelding made his first Sandown start of the season in the featured Times Handicap against a fine field and not only won as he pleased but cut almost two seconds off the track record for the mile and 70 yards set by Severance on Oct. 1, 1960.

Running easily in fifth place, about five lengths off the pace, most of the way, Desert Fire wasn't asked to move by Jockey George Miller until the field headed for home. He just shifted into high and won going away by almost three lengths.

The time of 1:14 2-5 was one and four-fifths second better than the previous best time for the distance at Sandown and made the $4.70 straight payoff look like an overlay.

But Desert Fire had to share the spotlight with a four-year-old filly and 5,287 bettors who jammed the mutuel windows to set a new single-day betting record for Sandown.

Ky Look, facing what was the best field of sprinters ever assembled for one race at Sandown, proved what those who knew about breeding had been saying by taking the invitational handicap that was the sixth race and setting a track standard for the six furlongs.

Starting on the outside of the seven-horse field was no handicap at all for the Kentucky-bred filly. Jockey Charlie Ulrich asked her for speed at the break. She gave it to get to the front and was in front by four clear lengths at the finish.

Catching Milady Pleases near the finish but making no impression on the winner was Rebel Lea while Turk's Boy, also moving in the stretch just missed getting show money.

PUSHES LEADER

Milady Pleases, who lost her track record of 1:11 3-5, pushed Ky. Look until they came out of the backstretch to help the winner cut a fifth of a second off her mark.

It was the kind of racing, and on a perfect day for racing, which deserved support. And it got it. With favorites winning five races, including the second, third and fourth, and getting in the money in the other three events, it created perfect conditions for the mutuels.

LONG LINEUPS

And they hummed, with long lineups for every race. When the adding up was done, the $135,734 bet yesterday was about a $1,000 more than was bet on Thanksgiving Day, 1960 and $7,370 more than was bet on the same day a year ago.

Only Ky. Look, an overlay as too many punters took into account her first start at Sandown, in the Colonist Handicap over a mile last Saturday, and the No. 7 pole position, and Pay Hike managed to post double-figure win returns on the board.

Ky. Look returned $10.70 while Pay Hike, who came from last place in the last three furlongs to win by about an inch over pace-setting Eastern Scout in the 11-furlong marathon, paid $16.10.

Roe and Noe, Silver Mint, Somedrive and the odds-on Davendel joined Desert Fire as winning favorites. Tomander was beaten a head in the first race, Hasty Hawk in the marathon and Milady Pleases in the sprint feature finished third.

Mystery Fire Sweeps Photo Display Window

A fire of unknown origin last night swept through the display window of Victoria Photo Supply, 1015 Douglas Street, and destroyed a number of projectors and cameras.

Firemen fought the blaze for nearly an hour and kept it confined to the window.

Unofficial damage estimates ranged all the way from $1,000 to $4,000.

600 Log Gifts

By JILL ARLETT

A steady whine of power saws pierced the air at Clover Point yesterday afternoon as more than 600 Victoria University students turned driftwood into firewood in aid of the United Appeal.

More than $180 was collected by the students from the sale of wood which was loaded into cars waiting in line at the Point. Donations averaged $2 a carload.

Both freshmen and upperclassmen crowded the beach all around Clover Point as they collected driftwood, divided it into sections with power saws and chopped and stacked it into piles ready to be picked up.

The sawdust flew well on into the afternoon as people continued to go to the area.

By 5 p.m. the beach was cleaned of a lot of the driftwood and the amateur loggers stopped to nurse their blisters and indulge in a corn roast.

Student organizer Terry Clark said last night the success of the log-saw was largely due to the enthusiasm of the students and the addition of more power saws.

"Everyone worked hard all afternoon—especially the girls, who carried most of the wood to the waiting cars."

Although the wood-cutting took up most of the students' energy, there was still plenty left when 50 dozen ears of corn—donated by fourth-year arts student Nels Granewall—were eagerly devoured.

Pleased with the success of the event, Mr. Clark said the students' log-saw will undoubtedly be held again next year.

Next week students will make an official presentation of the money collected to the United Appeal.

Crash Cuts Man's Arm

A Victoria motorist was taken to St. Joseph's Hospital with a badly cut arm after his small car rolled over on Sooke Road last night.

Stephen Prinke, 3091 Paisley, was admitted for surgery and was in satisfactory condition early this morning. Scott Robinson of Otter Point, a passenger in the car, was uninjured.

Police said damage to the car was $700.

Garden Meeting

Regular meeting of the View Royal Garden Club will be held at 8:15 p.m. Wednesday in the community hall.

Demand Extends Belt Installation

Members of three Victoria car clubs yesterday could not cope with the swarms of Victoria motorists who wanted safety belts installed in their cars.

Members of the Mystics, the Roadsters and the Quarter-Milers worked non-stop from 9 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. yesterday at a vacant paved lot and installed 170 seat belts—twice the number anticipated.

WILL CONTINUE

The hot-rodders will install safety belts for free next Saturday and Sunday and weekends after that as long as the land-office demand keeps up.

Car owners can buy belts for the $6.30 cost price and have them installed free at the vacant Fyfe Cleaners lot on Douglas Street.

An official of the B.C. Automobile Association hailed the action of the Victoria hot-rod clubs in organizing and staffing the free belt-installation centre.

Cmdr. Frank Barclay, assistant secretary-manager of the Victoria branch, said, "We are too often prone to criticize members of these car clubs. We should be as quick to commend."

Airmen to Meet

First meeting of the season of 809 Pacific Wing, RCAF Association will be held at 8 p.m. Wednesday, in the RCAF Urban Centre.

True Test of Gifted Pupils Psychologists' Key Goal

By IAN STREET

The search for gifted children and better ways to teach them is acquiring more and more importance in today's educational system, Toronto-born Dr. Gordon Henley said yesterday.

Dr. Henley is visiting associate professor of psychology at Victoria University for the coming year and during his stay will serve as consultant psychologist to the metropolitan board of health.

The consulting side of his job will take up two days each week, mostly with children referred by school nurses because they have emotional problems.

Dr. Henley stressed his job won't involve searching out of gifted youngsters in Greater Victoria schools. "This is an educational problem," he said.

But in the general field, he said, psychologists are actively working to establish accurate means of testing creative ability.

This is necessary because the gifted youngster doesn't necessarily have a high IQ.

"The problem is basically one of the schools helping the gifted youngster to identify his particular creative talents and then to help these special children make the best use of available educational facilities," said Dr. Henley.

In this educational function, psychology can be of great assistance by carrying out research that results in development of accurate tests to determine creative ability.

Dr. Henley said there is growing pressure on children to do well in school because higher education is becoming increasingly necessary for even modest business success. He added the pressure on youngsters to achieve good academic standing was "not necessarily harmful."

* * *

College students, said Dr. Henley, are more serious than those of the early postwar years and more conscious of the global implications of such grave issues as nuclear armament.

Island Teachers Talk Curriculum

NANAIMO—The Vancouver Island Regional Conference, a gathering of 50 teachers from all parts of the Island, met Saturday at the Tally Ho Motel.

Purposes of the conference were to discuss changes in the present school curriculum and make recommendations in regard to desirable changes.

Nanaimo was represented by Gavin Hallett and Stewart Wright, assisted by John Bradley and Mrs. Elsie Brandle.

Peter McLoughlin, vice-principal of Woodlands Junior High School and a member of the executive of the B.C. School Teachers' Federation, was director of the conference.

Alberni Scottish Win Prized Cadet Trophy

The Alberni unit of the Canadian Scottish Regiment (Princess Mary's) cadet corps has been awarded the James Gourlay Trophy for being the best Scottish cadet corps on Vancouver Island.

The presentation marks the third time the Alberni corps has taken home the trophy presented by its donor, Mr. Gourlay, a retired instructor of the CSR cadet corps in Victoria.

The Alberni corps was chosen first in the province for the year 1961-62.

The corps also took the quarter-mile relay, senior 100-yard dash, the light machine gun race and the aggregate total during the cadet service of Canada sports and field day in Vancouver this summer.

The Alberni unit is commanded by Capt. R. J. Gornall, chief instructor, and at present includes 80 cadets.

Won't Sue IWA Says Firm

MacMillan, Bloedel & Powell River Co. has "the right to sue for substantial damages" an IWA local for losses entailed by a "wildcat" strike of union members at Port Alberni, a company spokesman said last night.

But the company has no intention of suing—and its application to the Labor Relations Board to prosecute the president of Local 1-85 and 48 boom men was just to "place it officially on the record that these 'wildcat' strikes are illegal."

CONFERENCE MOVE

The comment followed charges made in an "emergency" resolution to the IWA western regional conference in Vancouver, which said the giant lumber firm was out to "smash" the Port Alberni local.

The resolution called for nationwide support for the union's six locals in a "war" against the firm.

"It must be obvious the resolution's language used is not that of responsible Canadian trade unionists," the company spokesman said.

SENIORITY DISPUTE

The resolution was presented to the convention by Local 1-85 president Walter Allen, cited along with 48 boom men by the company in its application.

The boom men walked off the job on Aug. 27 in a seniority dispute, returning Sept. 3, after 500 millworkers were idled.

The resolution called MacMillan, Powell River "dogmatic, autocratic and reactionary."

INTENTION CLAIMED

It said it was the announced intention of the company "to commence proceedings without justification in an attempt to smash a local union of the IWA and to intimidate and harass the union's president and a number of boom men at the Sonnass division."

The company statement said the Labor Relations Board will decide if "prosecution is justified."

WILL SAY SO

"If (the board) does not think it is proper to prosecute the union, it will say so. The company has no other purpose than to end a series of irresponsible 'wildcat' strikes by Local 1-85 of the IWA whose president is Walter Allen.

"We are not seeking to exact retribution. The company has the right to sue for substantial damages. It is not doing this.

"It is only concerned with having it placed officially on the record that these 'wildcat' strikes are illegal, in preventing future strikes and in establishing the company has carried out all its obligations and has obeyed the law."

STAFF NOTEBOOK
By Ted Shackleford

DEAR DEER: Victoria Fish and Game Protective Association hurriedly cancelled plans to co-sponsor a movie on the Northwest's fabled Hidden Valley when the man who was to present it—William Leitz of North Surrey—was fined $300 or 60 days in Sooke court yesterday. Bill was caught pit-lamping deer on the Otter Point Road at 2:30 a.m. yesterday by conservation officer Jack Leafesty and RCMP Cpl. L. W. Dorsey.

VITAMINS B, U, N, C and O?: A "free 30-day supply" of vitamins has caused a lot of annoyance to Betty McEwen, 1162 Fort. Seems she read an ad offering this bargain with "no obligation to keep buying anything," so she sent off the coupon. But when the "free" vitamins arrived an enclosure informed her they were only free if she signed up to buy them regularly. Now she is getting unpleasant dunning letters from the east, threatening legal action. It would be interesting to see just how far the company would go to collect on its "free" offer with "no obligation to keep buying anything."

ALOHA: Odd sight on Victoria streets this past few months has been the Hawaiian license plates on tourist cars. Publicity commissioner Bill Hawkins reports that 14 have passed through so far, shipped all the way from the tropic islands. Vancouver Island must have something if Hawaiians visit us.

LAWYER LOST: Up-Island lawyer appearing in city police court the other day learned a little law from the court officer, Const. Angus Stewart. Legal eagle had brought his 12-year-old son down to sit through the morning's cases but Angus gently informed him the boy would have to leave—children under 16 aren't permitted to sit through the court. "Since when?" said the lawyer, in words to that effect. "Since 23 years ago," Angus replied.

CANOE COVE: What are the wild waves whispering? They're whispering someone goofed with the bronze plaque on the Causeway wall dedicated to Capt. John Voss and his Indian dugout Tilikum. Donated by Royal Victoria Yacht Club, the plaque says Voss "sailed singlehandedly across the Pacific, Indian and Atlantic oceans." Fact of the matter, as Capt. William Gregory pointed out at a recent meeting of the Thermopylae Club, is Voss shared the journey with a number of different men—one at a time. One account of the trip puts it at eight in all.

JET AGE: Accountant George Ray and wife Aphia are quite convinced this is the age of speed. Just recently, on a Wednesday, they opened a new venture, the George Inn, an English tea room, on Broughton Street. Four days later, on Saturday, a couple dropped in because friends back in Toronto had recommended it to them.

Fire Chief Burns

Many Are Called But Few Respond

NANAIMO — A routine fire dril this week at Cedar, which brought out only seven men out of a roster of 30, sparked critical remarks from fire chief Bob Osborne and Charles Rudolph, chairman of the Cedar water board.

The chief remarked that in an emergency the presence of ample help may prove of little value, without the special training needed to operate the equipment.

Mr. Rudolph said: "Cedar is now virtually without fire protection, in spite of a good fire truck and adequate water system."

There has been for some time a controversy among Cedar ratepayers as to whether the present dilapidated fire hall should be reconditioned or a new one built.

The Ratepayers Association is awaiting a report on the matter, scheduled to be made shortly by Alistair MacLeod, president of the association.

NANAIMO—Fred Steeds, secretary of the Nanaimo Cribbage League, said Saturday the league's fall and winter series will begin Wednesday evening next.

A total of 16 teams are entered this year, and play will take place at the Canadian Legion Hall on Wallace Street.

COURTENAY — Briefings for 250 United Appeal canvassers will start here Monday to prepare workers for the campaign which starts in October.

Expansion of the payroll deduction scheme will be emphasized in the talks to the campaigners.

Mayor W. C. Moore said individual donations will have to be higher this year to meet the $26,000 quota, partly because of the loss of some donars with the closing of the Fanny Bay shingle mill this year.

COURTENAY—A committee of three is to be named by the Courtenay recreation commission to make a survey of recreation requirements in this area.

Purpose of the survey, to be made with the approval of many local areas, is to determine if it is feasible to form a recreation district here.

NANAIMO—At a meeting of the Nanaimo Chess Club, Fred Jepson was elected president, L. Davey, vice-president and Frank Bryson, secretary-treasurer. Fred Schultz is tournament dirctor.

PORT ALBERNI — The picket line pacing before Zeller's Port Alberni store is an extension of the line at North Surrey where the Retail Clerks Union is out on strike, Phil Cave, the union's International representative said here.

The picket line is within a block of the Woolworth store where picketing by the retail clerks has been in effect for approximately 15 months.

Local manager Doug Dryden of Zeller's said that he expects to release a statement early next week.

"You can call it an informational picket line," Mr. Cave said.

NANAIMO — Rotary Governor Gordon Tongue of Seattl addressed the Nanaimo Rotary Club at its Friday luncheon on the progress of Rotary in the area within his jurisdiction.

Dr. Herbert Welch asked for volunteers to provide accommodation for 20 foreign students from International House at UBC, who will be in Nanaimo during the Oct. 5 weekend.

ERRINGTON — Decision to dissolve the EDA Players Drama Club was made at a meeting held at the home of Mrs. H. F. Butler.

The club was formed in 1946, and in the 16 years since its inception, has presented many evenings of drama in conjunction with other clubs in the district. Two pantomimes, "Dick Whittington" and "Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves," scripts written by the late H. F. Butler and Bill Bowden in colaboration, were produced in the early years, and later, for 13 years, the club hosted the Upper Vancouver Island Senior and Junior Drama Festival.

Volunteers Busy On School Project

DUNCAN — Rain or shine, daylight or early autumn darkness, a group of hard-working volunteers are busy five nights a week and every Saturday to build a combined school, church and community hall on Trunk Road.

The labor force consists of 67 men who belong to the Christian Reformed Church of Duncan and foreman John Berends, a carpenter by trade, hopes the $42,000 project will be finished by Christmas.

SOD TURNED

About five weeks ago the first sod was turned and now the workmen are putting in the first floor of the big structure.

Mr. Berends said the labor included in the total sum is estimated at $15,000.

The project is being financed through donations and private loans. Main purpose of the building will be to accommodate about 50 children of the Duncan Christian School now being taught in the basement of the adjacent church.

PARENT-CONTROLLED

Rev. Jan Van Dyk, who was transferred to the Cowichan Valley from Nova Scotia two days ago, said the school—though encouraged by the church—is a separate institution and is entirely run and governed by the parents. At present two teachers are employed by the organization.

RELIGIOUS TRAINING

In addition to the regular curriculum the grade 1 to 7 students at the Duncan Christian School have religious instruction.

Most of the parents belong to the church and the children are brought daily from Shawnigan Lake, Chemainus and other parts of the Cowichan Valley. The congregation consists of 58 families.

Policeman Stabbed, Trio Charged

TORONTO (CP)—Three Toronto youths were arrested and charged Friday night after a policeman was beaten and stabbed at Yonge Street and Davenport Road before a large crowd of spectators.

Police said only one person out of the huge crowd attempted to aid the policeman.

WARNING ISSUED

Constable Patrick Pacey, 23, warned a youth about crossing the street against a red light and then charged him with drinking under age. Four of the boy's friends surrounded the policeman and threatened him.

Detectives said the teenagers kicked the policeman and then beat him with their fists. One of the youths pulled the policeman's gun from its holster.

But a passer-by, William Orr, 23, of Toronto, kicked the gun from the boy's hand and ran to help Const. Pacey when he saw one of the attackers pull a knife. Orr was cut on the wrists.

CALLS POLICE

Joseph Pitt, a taxi driver, got out of his cab to aid Const. Pacey, grabbed the gun from the sidewalk, went back to his car and radioed his dispatcher who notified police.

Orr required 15 stitches to close his wounds and Const. Pacey required 12 stitches for cuts on his wrists.

CHARGES LAID

Geoffrey McCrae, 18, was charged with wounding, assaulting police and drinking under age. Peter Swift, 19, was charged with assaulting police and common assault, and Thomas O'Reilly, 18, was charged with assaulting police and drinking under age.

Auto Damage High

Fire, Crash Coincide in Duncan

DUNCAN — In a matter of minutes Friday night, Duncan was the scene of a fire and a three-car crash.

At 7 p.m., the North Cowichan Fire Brigade was called to a fire at the Herd Road garbage dump where flames had engulfed a power pole. The firemen soon had the blaze under control.

At about the same time, a three-car crash occurred at the intersection of Jubilee and Kenneth Streets. One driver, northbound on Jubilee, hit a car on Kenneth, driven by Leslie Bennington, of Lake Cowichan.

The latter vehicle was smashed against a third automobile, driven by Gerald Fisher of Duncan, who had stopped at the flashing traffic signal at Kenneth.

No one was injured but damage was estimated at $1,200.

Vandals Smash Windows

DUNCAN — Vandals late Friday smashed one display window at Wright's Jewellers and four large plate glass windows at Wilson Motors here.

Damage amounted to $155 in the first instance and approximately $600 in the second.

Nothing was taken from either premises, firm representatives said.

Rocks were found beneath the shattered glass.

No Beer Sales At Grocery Shop

Attorney-General Bonner says it's not likely the government will allow grocery store beer sales as recommended this week by the International Woodworkers of America, CLC, regional convention in Vancouver. "There is mixed reaction to this matter in the legislature and I don't foresee any change in the law," Mr. Bonner said Saturday.

80 Years Ago an Adventurous Englishman Envisaged the Diversion of the Kootenay

New Quest for Power Follows Old Plans

Writers have explored few subjects so exhaustively as the proposed power development of the Kootenay-Columbia basin.

Mica Creek, High Arrow, Duncan Lake and Libby Dam are as familiar to B.C. readers as the name of the prime minister.

By ERIC SISMEY

Perhaps it is less generally known that engineering studies made to cover full development of the two streams in Canada arrived at three possible and reasonable schemes. Each includes dams at Mica Creek on the Big Bend of the Columbia, a dam at the outlet of the Arrow Lakes; and two of the proposals provide for diverting the Kootenay River into the Columbia near Golden.

The story of Canal Flats began a long time ago. In 1883, an Englishman, W. A. Baillie-Grohman, conceived the idea of reclaiming the wet lands around Creston which were known, when I duck hunted there, as the Kootenay Flats. Grohman proposed diverting the Kootenay River, which flows south past Columbia Lake, into the Columbia River which, while only about a mile distant, is flowing in the opposite direction.

If the annual freshet was diverted, Grohman contended, the low lands at the head of Kootenay Lake would no longer be flooded every summer.

Before I discuss this proposal it may be interesting to consider the man himself, what sort of a man he was.

Baillie-Grohman was a rich Englishman — rich enough to have a castle in Germany. He was an ardent big game hunter and it was this sport that brought him to the North American continent. He was an author. "Camps in the Rockies," "Sport in the Alps" and others came from his pen. His most interesting book, which gives splendid pictures of hunting in the early days, is "Fifteen Years Sport and Life in Western America and British Columbia." This work, published in London in 1900, has been long out of print.

No 'Top-Shelfer'

While Mr. Grohman was brought up in the lap of luxury he did not enjoy hunting that way. He writes of his first and only trip in what he terms a "top-shelfers" outfit. This did not offer him what he wanted, but it did allow him to meet a wilderness trapper, Port, who became his guide and companion on many hunts in the western United States. Port, who had all the fine qualities one could wish for, had only slept in a real bed twice in 10 years. There were other companions. "Among these uncouth tramps of the wilderness," Grohman wrote, "beneath a very shaggy exterior there lay many of the large-hearted qualities of ideal men . . true men on whose word one could build and on whose cool, quiet courage, though subdued, you could implicitly depend."

On another occasion when hunting mountain goat in the Kootenays, he engaged an Indian couple. He found the woman as good with paddle or pack as the man. Nearly 30 days were spent with these companions, more than 100 miles of Kootenay Lake and river were explored in their pine bark canoe.

After a successful hunt Mr. Grohman wrote: "The weeks I passed in the company of my primitive Indian couple in that, then, remote corner of the world, were among the most interesting I look back upon."

THESE ARE the unique pine bark canoes of the Kootenay Indians in which Baillie-Grohman went exploring.

Great Hunter

The first part of "Sport and Life in Western America and British Columbia" describes hunting experiences beginning in 1879. It covers all species of our game as well as bison (buffalo). The antlers of two wapiti (elk) he killed in Wyoming in 1880 were great enough to be included in present-day editions of the Boone and Crockett Club's "Records of North American Big Game."

Mr. Grohman was an early conservationist, deplored the ruthless slaughter of buffalo, foresaw where it would end, and he had much to say about the killing of deer and wapiti for their hides. At the beginning of Chapter 2, he wrote: "If you had told the average American 20 years ago that before the century would end the enactment of game laws — not the mere passing but also enforcement — would be a burning question from the Atlantic to the Pacific, you would have been informed that you knew nothing about the greatest and freest people on the earth."

Mr. Grohman follows his chapters on big game with remarks about the salmon of the Pacific slope. His tabulation of packed cases over a 25-year period is a record to make one very thoughtful. On the Columbia River 1,000 cases — 48 one-pound tins — were packed in 1866. The pack rose steadily to 1883 when 629,000 cases were packed. From that date, in spite of increased fishing pressure, there had been a steady, year to year decline until in 1899 only 318,000 cases were packed . and the decline continues. In British Columbia the same general pattern would exist.

Wilderness Land

West Kootenay in 1882 was an empty, uninhabited wilderness, not a single settler, not a single house marred the solitude of this vast tract and only one of its broad rivers and lovely lakes were occasionally ruffled by the quaintly-modelled pine bark canoes of the Kootenay Indians, which are unlike any other craft in the world.

The old Dewdney trail that once passed through West Kootenay to end at the Wildhorse placer diggings — discovered in 1862 — had long become completely blocked and not a human being had passed over it for more than 10 years.

In the spring of 1882 three prospectors came down the Kootenay River from Dick Fry's ranch, now Bonner's Ferry — the only white man's habitation in the Kootenay Valley, in a boat they had knocked together from whipsawn lumber. The leader of the party, R. E. Sproule, an experienced miner, noticed a large iron stain on a bluff along the shores of Kootenay Lake which, after investigation, proved to be a wide vein of galena. After staking their claims, the law — which at that time was written only for placer diggings — required that the locations be registered within 72 hours; an impossible task since the nearest commissioner's office at Wildhorse was nearly 300 trail miles away. This mineral belt soon became the focus of a bitter quarrel because Capt. Ainsworth, founder of the Oregon Navigation Company, had also sent an experienced prospector, Thomas Hammil, to Kootenay Lake where he, too, found the

The People of Aiyansh Watched Their Homes Vanish

RIVER on a RAMPAGE

Except for the incessant roar of the Nass River that Saturday afternoon in October the Indian village of Aiyansh, 110 miles northeast of Prince Rupert was quiet and calm. If anyone was to have a premonition about the flood it should have been Mrs. Josephine Morven, 27, who walked the length of the village, from her picture-window home on ground overlooking the lush meadows of Empire Park upriver to the government gauge to measure the height of water.

By ED ARROL

"We didn't think the village would flood so we went to bed about midnight," she said later. But the Nass River, both food locker and highway for the Indian, is a treacherous river that few white men will navigate even in fair weather. And now it was flooding—a much greater flood than anyone would have expected from watching the marker or making a prediction about the amount of snow that had collected on Michael's Horse, a configuration of a horse visible across the river on Mount Priestly. It was named after Michael Bright, an illustrious leader of the 50-piece Aiyansh Harmonic Silver band. Snow on Michael's Horse would bring a flood.

Steady rains and unusually warm temperatures had forced water higher and higher through the canyon above Aiyansh so that it would be worth your life to cross the Nass River to the Terrace side. Josephine was startled as she lowered the plumb line. The river was 21 feet high and still rising!

Returning in the rain she passed Johnny's store where she and Cecil and their seven children lived in two small rooms on the second floor when my wife, Mary, and I were teaching at Aiyansh during 1957-58. The architecture of the Victorian-type homes that had been moved from Old Aiyansh, three miles downstream after the big flood there in 1917, was in contrast to homes like the Morvens. The draughty interiors and rat-infested upstairs of these family homes made Josephine's place a fairy castle and Josephine a proud queen.

All that afternoon and night (Oct. 14, 1961) the Nass River rose from 21 feet to 32 feet at its height. Huge logs slipped into the river to become battering rams and wreak havoc during the night and early morning. Within 12 hours the Nass River had uprooted the Morven home, had spun it and tossed it and heaved it with fearful strength against the far shore until Josephine's picture window home was nothing but a heap of broken lumber and glass.

The homes of 13 other Indian families disappeared in the same way. Two teacherages vanished. A nursing station was lifted off its foundations and hurled into the new school, wrecking both, while 17 other homes were shuffled in a rowdy game of checkers, the Nass River always the winner.

"About 4:30 a.m." Josephine said, "we were awakened by Cecil's parents and his sister who told us to leave our house right away, the river was rising fast.

"We woke the kids (all eight of them) and dressed them in their heavy clothes but all I gathered was a few blankets to take to my in-law's place. The wooden sidewalks were starting to float but we managed to walk on them."

Cecil used his speedboat to assist Miss Margaret Dawson and Miss Elizabeth Utting remove themselves and a few things from their teacherage. Bob Bidgood, the principal, was away in Terrace where his wife was having a baby. He had locked his teacherage; as a result the Bidgood's wedding presents and their winter's supply of food were lost! The teacherage disappeared down the Nass River.

"I wanted to go back to our house and save something," Josephine said. "I didn't think the river would be so swift. But it was.

"When we got to the house the water was up above my knees and when we went inside everything was floating around. We were still trying to put our bottled fish in some boxes we had brought with us when someone outside shouted for us to leave. Kenneth Grandson's house was drifting and it almost rammed into Leslie Wood's house—our next door neighbor—so we left our house without anything except Terry's (her son's) shoes that were floating around in front of me.

"That was the last time we were in our house. I was standing on the hill above the church when I saw our house drifting down the Nass. As soon as our big picture window broke that's when the house started to sink until just the roof was sticking out."

At 4 a.m. Monday the river started to drop from its peak of 32 feet. Nobody was able to cross the river until Monday afternoon, however, and that is when a party was able to phone news of the disaster to the outside.

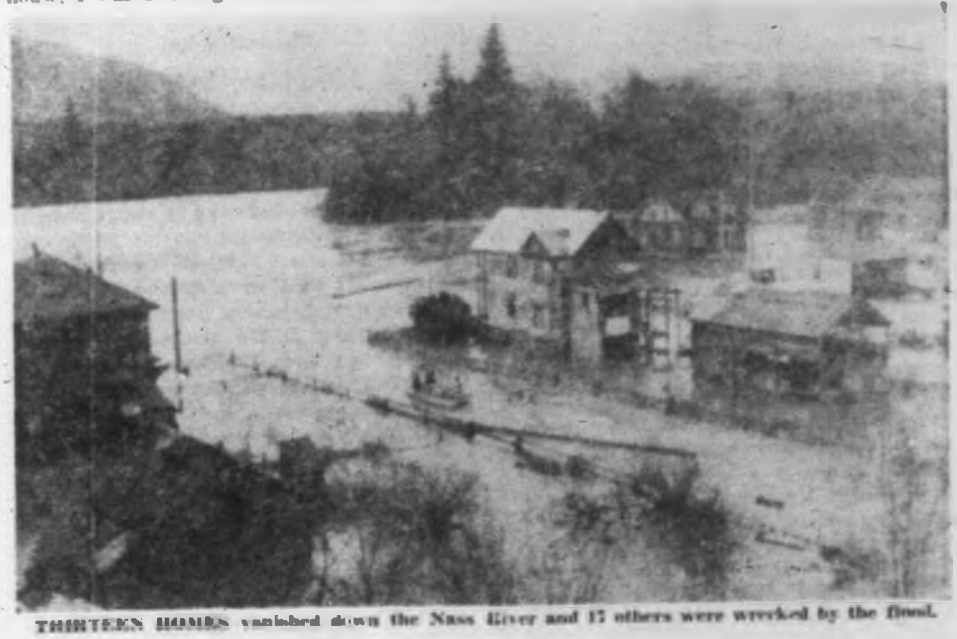

It is ironical that the department of Indian Affairs people chose to build on such a site. When we were there the officials who flew in from Prince Rupert scoffed at the idea of a flood, as if local opinion was worthless, and this added to the dissatisfaction of the Indians.

Miss Dawson and Miss Utting, former United Church missionaries in Africa and now teaching at Aiyansh, echo this plaint. In a letter in the Terrace Omineca Herald Miss Dawson described the flood and the loss of their home and school down the Nass River.

"People have told us that the river rises every year in November but since the last real flood was in 1917 nobody seemed to worry very much. However, I couldn't quite see why a beautiful new school house of three rooms, a nurse's residence (unoccupied since our arrival here) and two comfortable little homes, occupied respectively by the school principal, Bob Bidgood and his wife, and Elizabeth and myself, were built on such a low place in the village".

When Miss Dawson and Miss Utting were finally aroused at 4 a.m. by Indian friends the teachers still didn't take the flood seriously.

"We casually got ready, not being too excited. We dressed; we breakfasted on some double-yoked eggs given to us by a generous farmer's wife in Terrace the previous week and some delicious cinnamon buns, which we had baked, and wonderful coffee. We turned our mattresses up on end and put valuable things up as high as possible. Then we dressed warmly and after a third warning from someone at the door we left our home, little realizing that we would never again enter it."

THIRTEEN HOMES vanished down the Nass River and 17 others were wrecked by the flood.

The stark reality of the flood came with the dawn. Expecting to see "about three inches of water" in their house the teachers set off with an Indian boatman in the "now turbulent water" of the street.

"We floated through the fence," Miss Dawson says. Hubert Morven had salvaged much of their bedding and clothing; a typewriter, radio, records and player, some dresser drawers and Miss Dawson's winter coat.

The teachers spent Sunday watching houses break from their moorings as huge logs battered them. "We turned away heartsick at the sight," Miss Dawson continued. "We looked into houses still standing and saw the debris: beds upturned, furniture upside down, and mud everywhere.

"All day long we watched boxes of food, bundles of bedding and clothing being carried from boats to relatives' houses. But not one life was lost."

Time hangs long and heavy when there is over-crowding (as many as 30 people living in one house), and the government's proposal to move the village to a site across the river brought only temporary relief from gloom.

Miss Dawson indicated her discouragement

A Man Who Killed Without Remorse . . .

MURDER WAS THE

In the late afternoon of New Year's Day, 1941, as the mountain-girt North Thompson valley lay snowbound in the grip of winter, 26-year-old Provincial Constable W. A. "Bill" Bruce came to the startling realization, for a rookie cop, fate had pitched him the wildest curve of all. He had a murder on his hands!

Coast-trained, it was after a short spell with the Force's mounted troop that Bill got his first detachment, Red Pass on the CNR, 230 miles north of Kamloops, 43 miles south of Jasper with an eastward view of the Rockies and majestic Mount Robson for a neighbor.

I suppose it was much-respected and veteran Sergeant H. W. "Hughie" King who introduced Bill Bruce to his new post, and a day later with a good luck handshake left him on his own.

Next day was New Year's day, and there came an early morning phone call. It was from a CNR sectionman down the line at a whistle stop called Jackman, giving him the news that Frank Hargreaves, 55 year-old big game guide and trapper, had been found dead outside his cabin door.

Without delay, on a railway speeder in a nippy 10 below atmosphere—Bill Bruce, fur capped and muffled, sped 22 miles to the scene. Three miles north of Jackman, he took to the mile-and-a-half forest trail that brought him out in a snow-covered clearing where stood a log cabin. Outside it's front door lay an ominous oblong white mound.

When Bruce knelt beside it and brushed a two-inch mask of fresh-fallen snow from the dead man's face he knew there and then that his first day had started with a problem. The left side of the dead man's face was a gory cavity, the reason not hard to find. At the back of his head, right at the base of his skull, was the entry mark of a bullet.

Bruce straightened up, looked around for tracks but saw none. Of course! New snow!

Bullet's Flight Traced

That he had fallen backward was obvious, for after Bruce hauled the frozen corpse to its feet and leaned it against the cabin wall, he noticed frozen blood and bits of flesh on the door along with a bullet hole. Inside the cabin the constable traced the bullet's flight to where it ricocheted off a newel post at the bottom of a flight of stairs, then disintegrated in pieces that lay scattered on the floor.

No doubt assumed Bruce, Hargreaves had been about to enter his cabin when he was shot.

His glance around the cabin showed it had been thoroughly ransacked, a mattress pulled back, bedding on the floor, and drawers pulled out. On the table was the remains of a meal, along with a partly completed jigsaw puzzle.

The constable's telegraphic report to his Kamloops headquarters quickly brought to the scene Inspr. C. G. Barber, and district Sergt. King, and within a day or so the swift enquiries of the investigating trio helped form this picture.

A True B.C. Police Story

By

CECIL CLARK

Illustrated by

JOAN M. SMITH

Hargreaves had been dead two days before his body had been discovered by chance callers, neighbor John Schlichter and his 17-year-old daughter Lorraine. Suspicion for the crime seemed to fix on Allan Bruce Cunningham, a middle-aged and hungry stranger who appeared one day at Bill Blackman's cabin a mile-and-a-half from Hargreaves'—and got a meal. This was around noon on December 23, Blackman remembered, and in the afternoon Cunningham chopped some wood in repayment.

Toward evening Frank Hargreaves dropped in and Cunningham and he had much to talk about both being First World War veterans. Finally toward dusk Hargreaves left, but Cunningham stayed the night with the Blackmans.

Goose for a Gift

Next morning, December 24, the Blackman children, seven and five, delivered a goose to Hargreaves, towing it the mile-and-a-half on their sled. Cunningham went with them part of the way, then branched off toward the cabin of William Kimball, another neighbor.

Next day, Christmas day, the Blackman family dined on the goose with bachelor Hargreaves. Early next morning, Cunningham in speaking to Blackman, said he was working for Kimball looking after stock.

It was on that day that Kimball left early with a team and sleigh to get a load of fire logs. When he returned at dusk he saw no sign of his helper, although Cunningham's packboard and blankets were still in evidence.

To Kimball's annoyance he noticed the stock hadn't been fed, and then he idly remembered that the previous day Cunningham had asked if he could borrow his rifle (a .303 Savage) to shoot a coyote he'd noticed roaming nearby, and Kimball noted the gun in its usual place. It was that afternoon, when Kimball was away getting wood, that neighbors heard around three o'clock the sound of a shot from the direction of Hargreaves' cabin.

The police had already found a spent .303 cartridge in the snow, about 12 feet back from where Hargreaves fell, and Kimball, asked to check his ammunition, said he had only half a-dozen shells in the house, under a newspaper on a shelf above the gun. Three were now missing.

A rancher called Simpson verified the fact that Kimball with his team and sled was at least two-and-a-half hours' journey from the Hargreaves cabin around 4 p.m. on the day the shot was heard.

Hot on the Track

With these details, the police checked down the CNR, enquiring at every likely stopping place until finally they learned from farmer N. G. Grant at McLure, 30 miles away, that he'd given a night's lodging to a stranger calling himself Jack Douglas. The transient explained that he'd thrown his packboard away after he slipped on the ice and injured his shoulder. By the description it was Cunningham, whom Grant said proceeded on his way around noon on January 3.

Finally after a stint of checking and enquiries the 200-mile trail of the fugitive came to an end at the bunk house of a rancher called Haines, about 40 miles north of Kamloops. In Cunningham's pocket were a couple of .303 shells matching the make of those on Kimball's shelf.

It was after Cunningham was locked in a Kamloops cell that some sort of hunch or premonition caused the veteran Sergt. King to remark: "Somehow I've got the feeling that fellow has killed before."

From the subsequent course of events, it might have been true.

Four months later, at a Prince George trial, police ballistic experts proved that fragments of the fatal bullet matched Kimball's borrowed gun, and that the spent cartridge found outside the cabin was fired in the same weapon. For motive, the rifled cabin was assumed to have some link with the cold-blooded killing.

Aged Si Levey, another Hargreaves neighbor, was thought to be a valuable Crown witness for he actually saw a stranger, on the day of the killing, heading from Kimball's place in the direction of the dead man's cabin. However on account of his extreme age and failing eyesight old Levy failed to identify Cunningham in court. Defence counsel Tom Hurley argued strongly that anyone could have had access to Kimball's gun and on this note the jury gave Cunningham the benefit of the doubt, and said "not guilty."

Jailed for Theft

Not long after his trial, Cunningham was tagged with a theft, given two years in the penitentiary, and the district saw him no more.

Ten years rolled by, by which time peace reigned once more in the world and in British Columbia the khaki and green of the Provincial Police had been replaced by the scarlet and gold of the RCMP, although in the main it was members of the older force who continued to uphold the law. One of these was Sergt. Terry Stewart who, on a frosty morning in early October 1931, found himself examining the body of 72-year-old Albert Thorsen, a

. . . He Knew a Strange Compulsion

WANDERER'S DESTINY

widower with no next of kin, found dead in his lonely one-room cabin a few miles west of Endako, and about 100 miles west of Prince George. Old Thorsen had been dead a week in his cabin after being shot in the back of the head. Like the unfortunate Hargreaves, 10 years back, the old fellow's face was a far from pleasant sight.

Again, the Stranger

The Endako postmaster discovered the crime, when he noticed Thorsen failed to pick up his mail. The murder weapon, a rifle, was found cached behind the cabin. The only clue was a stranger, said to have been in Thorsen's company in Endako a couple of weeks before the killing.

Although the stranger had disappeared, observant townsfolk gave an excellent description, which was circularized.

Nine days after the Endako killing a 65-year-old man, giving the name of Arthur Cunningham, walked into the Clinton detachment of the RCM Police, and in matter-of-fact tones told Const. Jack Macdonald that he had not only killed Thorsen, but was also responsiblesible for the 10-year-old murder of Frank Hargreaves near Mount Robson.

At a Prince Rupert assize the next spring the trial of the wilderness killer commenced with a legal oddity. Cunningham pleaded guilty. Only once before had this happened in a B.C. murder trial (that was 50 years back) and coupled with a 1935 Ontario case, perhaps only the third time in Canada.

Although counsel explained that there could be only one result attending his admission, Cunningham was unmoved. "I killed them for money" was his unemotional statement.

After the judge had assured himself that the 65-year-old Nova Scotia-born war veteran thoroughly understood what he was doing, the court heard the report of a team of psychiatrists who offered the opinion that the prisoner had an education equal to first or second year university, that his memory was accurate, and he was apparently indifferent as to his future.

'Guilty as Charged'

Dissatisfied, the judge listened to three hours of evidence before asking for a replea. Cunningham, looking slightly bored, rose in the prisoner's box and calmly announced "Guilty as charged, your Lordship."

With only one verdict possible the thin-faced, grey-haired, bespectacled prisoner learned that afternoon, with almost an air of boredom, that he had but six weeks to live.

To those connected with the case it seemed as though he had realized at last that he was governed by something in his nature, some unseen force, that rendered him insensitive to homicide. It was a compulsion that he knew only death could still.

In line with the shrewd 10-year-old comment of Sergt. Hughie King, there were some in that Prince Rupert courtroom who couldn't help wondering how many other past back-woods killings, undiscovered, unreported or unsolved, could be laid at Cunningham's door.

In the intervening weeks, guards at Oakalla Prison had additional chance to size up this newcomer to the death cells.

Once, to the warden, he remarked, "I've spent 27 years of my life behind bars, and every time I came out I was a little harder."

Certainly he was a man completely without conscience, devoid of any remorse.

"I'd kill a man for his pay cheque," he one day admitted.

Apparently he never married, had no known relatives, and awaiting his end shunned all attempts at religious consolation, refusing even to see his only visitor, a one-time neighbor.

He whiled away his final days playing cards with his guards and on the eve of his execution, after a big steak dinner, slept soundly until first light. When he awoke he was ready for a hand of gin rummy with the death watch. With unwavering and quick skill he played hand after hand right up to six o'clock, the moment of truth. Without comment he walked firmly to the gallows and at two minutes past six on a bright August morning, became just another statistic in the warden's annual report.

"He was the hardest man we ever had in here," said Deputy Warden Angus McLeod, Later Angus, due to retire a few months later, spoke from the breadth of 27 years' prison service.

Bill Bruce, the rookie cop who opened this story with the first phone call on the first day on his first detachment, went on to a colorful 6½ years with the B.C. Provincial Police, before transferring to the Liquor Control Board in 1947. Today he holds down the post of Director of Licences. Old-timers in the police who may have lost track of him, will find him with his charming wife and family at 2381 Lansdowne, Victoria.

in a letter she wrote to a church group in Victoria:

"An ominous quiet hangs over Aiyansh today (January 30, 1962). Many folks are in bed with the 'flu; hungry black ravens are investigating odds and ends of garbage; the schools are closed; three of the five teachers also have the 'flu; famished horses wander aimlessly about hoping to find a bit of wood with some bark left on it for their next meal. The river has risen with rains, the melting snow on the mountains and the breaking up of ice. The dogs are wandering around in packs, almost as ravenous as the horses now. One starving horse was pulled to pieces by them last week.

Discouraging as it must be for the white teachers at Aiyansh I prefer the Indian point of view as expressed in Josephine's last letter to me (January 14, 1962):

"Well! Everything has happened to our village this year. Rod Tait's house burned to the ground today." Rod, who took his high school in Prince Rupert has since won individual honors in athletics. "They didn't get a chance to save any of their things," Josie continued, "except his piano."

This would make sense at Aiyansh where their 50-piece Harmonic Silver band has won many awards at musical festivals. And, while music and sports are so honored at Aiyansh there is hope that an even finer Indian village will emerge.

BOUNTY of the SEA

"Fresh oysters—raw please," was the customer's request. And six of them—the result of 40 years' experimental development and four years growing time—were downed in three minutes.

It all started back in 1916 when John Malamos and his wife, Mary, arrived in Ladysmith from Greece and six years later began their oyster business. They became so well-known in the area that the lane leading to the wharf is officially called after them.

Mrs. Malamos no longer actively participates in the business but retains the partnership with her husband and Peter Lemberis, a fellow countryman, who has been with the company for 23 years and worked through all stages of the operation before becoming partner-manager.

And the Seagull Brand Oyster Company, the largest on Vancouver Island and the second largest in B.C., operates from what appears to be a charming blue and white cottage complete with hanging baskets of flowers — the only clue to oysters being the huge pile of sun-whitened shells that forms a bank to the water's edge.

Oyster farming isn't as simple as one might think. Mr. and Mrs. Malamos began their business in a very small way, by leasing a tract of seabed from the government, and then faced the problem of how to obtain spat or seed oysters. They were the first oyster farmers to solve this problem—by importing them from Japan. But in 1958 they harvested enough spat to make further imports unnecessary.

The seeds, no larger than the head of a match, are sewn in the seabed and two years later are thinned out and some re-bedded in order to ensure ample space for proper growth. Three and a half to four years after seeding the oysters are harvested.

All the procedures were for years hampered by the fact that "time and tide wait for no man" — not even an oyster farmer. And several men are required to work at top speed for the few hours of low tide for the harvest.

Even the government has been working on speeding operations, and last year, with government specifications, Mr. Lemberis built a replica of their invention — an hydraulically operated oyster digger. This is a machine that has cut down use of manpower by its ability to operate underwater and to scoop along the seabed at 100 feet a minute. By means of a manifold, powerful jets of water loosen the soils and wash oysters into the scoop. They are carried to the surface on a conveyor belt. Mr. Lemberis added another conveyor belt so that the oysters are automatically heaped onto the scow which carries the machine into the area.

THE AUTHOR on a beach at De Courcy Island amidst a field of mature oysters.

The harvest is brought to the "shucking" house where it passes rapidly through the hands of the expert shuckers. Pearls are found very rarely—one exception being an oyster containing 175 pearls presented to the provincial government.

From the shuckers to the cleaning and canning room! Their particular method of washing oysters is another innovation of Mr. Lemberis. It is very simply part of a washing machine with many-holed bars added through which compressed air is forced while the constantly running water churns. This thoroughly cleanses any shell particles from the oysters. Only the choicest specimens are used for packing and canning.

Even the shells are utilized, and last June 430 tons of them were removed to Vancouver where they are used in lime mixtures and in chicken feed.

The years have gone by and the business has gradually expanded until today, with 23 different claims covering over 300 acres in the Ladysmith, Crofton and Thetis Island areas, and with a sample crop of 16,000 gallons last year, they are kept busy supplying their distributors throughout B.C.

"Our youngest customer," said Mr. Lemberis, "has been handling our oysters for six years and the oldest since the first harvest over 35 years ago."

There are said to be 36 ways of serving oysters, but most people prefer one of two—raw or deep fried.

Mr. Lemberis, whose notation on the menu of his newly-opened Star drive-in restaurant on the Island Highway, "We grow our own oysters," suggests that that they are best served right from the shell with seasoning, lemon, tabasco sauce, and olive oil.

R. M. ANGUS' STAMP PACKET

A resident of Edmonton, J. M. Harris McLeod, who evidentally enjoys reading The Islander, has kindly written in reference to a recent article in which I mentioned selling my magnificent copy of the 10-cent Prince Albert in mint condition, 100 percent centered and in the true, jet black shade, to the late Warren H. Olson of Boston.

To show what can happen to a stamp in the way of price increase, I will quote from Mr. McLeod's letter:

"Enjoyed your note on W. H. C. and if you do not know of the following, it could be of interest.

"I was in Toronto when Bernard Harmer was showing the B.N.A. part of the Caspary collection in September of 1956 and had several pleasant hours admiring the collection of a great philatelist who insisted on gem items, and he had them.

"In turning the pages, one stamp, in my opinion, stood out above all others regardless of price or value—it was a jet black 10c Consort centred, full gum and as fresh as the day on which it was printed. (Lot 169).

"Being Scottish and suspicious, I asked Mr Harmer if this stamp could have been built up from a proof, backed, gummed and perforated. But he replied, 'Not if signed by Colson.' And it was—W. H. C.

"I asked for an estimate and was told that $1,100 was the top bid to date and that buy bids could be expected, so I gave up on that one. It was sold for $1,340. Could have been the stamp mentioned in your article.

"Arnold Banfield could have been the buyer as he was interested, but I did not see his collection after he assembled it. If his stamps are sold, the black beauty could appear again but I hope his family will leave the Consorts as they are, in memory of a fine man.

"I collect this stamp only, and have about 400 copies which I consider very fine, though I find the shades in good condition are just as difficult as the centring, though who can say what the colors really were. When the Americans were here during the oil boom days, one young fellow told me of a bundle of letters held by his family in Philadelphia and written in Ontario by a member of the family in search of oil, 1850-1860. He brought them to Edmonton (not for sale) and those postmarked July-October, 1859, had 10 cent stamps in many shades, from light tan to many shades of brown to black. So?"

At the time I found my perfect copy, about 40 years ago, its catalogue price was $150, and I sold it to Warren H. Colson for $120.

The Caspary collection was one of the most famous in the world and I am delighted to find that at least one stamp I previously owned was probably represented in it.

In the Lovely Islands There Is a Hush

Dark Days Approach On Tiptoe

These September days are warm with sun, but cool around the edges. Holidays are over and only a few lucky cruisers sail through Uganda Channel.

By GILEAN DOUGLAS

Friends on Keats Island, 20 miles north of Vancouver, write me that the city seems to be enveloped in a cloud of yellow atomic smoke as the autumn fogs creep in on it. The weather forecast for Georgia Strait speaks of soon, dark days. But right now, on Cortes Island, the days are soft gold; although mornings and evenings have a hint of sleet in them.

The diving float looks lost and lonely and there are no gay tourist colors crowding along the dock. Mists come down over the mountains of Vancouver Island. The lamplight glow of willow and broad-leaved maple shines above tawny orchard grass and the blue of quiet waters under quiet sky. The horse chestnut tree near my gate is a golden glory and the berries of the arbutus show rubied against the grey-green velvet of moss.

On island trails the snowberries have ripened beside the scarlet fruits of starflower and the rose bushes begin to look as though they were getting ready for a Chinese lantern festival. The golden corydalis illuminates grey rocks, with fireweed blazing up behind it. From the water it looks as though snow had drifted into the crevices where yarrow, pearly everlasting and white hawkweed bloom. Gum weed and false dandelion splash yellow in green clearings and almost everywhere you go are plantain, colt's foot, burdock, hawk's beard and the proud Canadian thistle.

Grass, moss and fern come into their own now that shower alternates with sun. Velvet, couch oat, arrow, rye and the silvery hair grass undulate in the salt sea wind that breaks the shining mirror of the sea into a million million pieces. Between the shots of hunters the woods are silent and complete. There is no bird song, only a swift glimpse of dark wing in the underbrush.

Between the rocks of moist forest plains rock brake and licorice fern are vivid green against grey. Acres of sword fern stand pointedly erect and bracken is emerald lace spread underneath the alders. Deer fern and wood fern add their decorative touch occasionally and, more rarely still, the delicate maidenhair thrusts out from rich leaf mold.

Under Douglas fir, western hemlock and red cedar the mosses are turning from harsh grey and tan to moist malachite. There are well over a hundred species of mosses on these islands of the Inland Passage, of which reindeer moss is one of the most interesting. Through a magnifying glass a section of it looks like a miniature forest of minute trees and that is exactly what it is. Once those tiny trees were forest giants but now even Tom Thumb would disdain them. But not the reindeers, if we had any.

Things seem drowsy and relaxed in these fellow autumn days, now that summer shouts and leaps are over. The later coming of daylight means longer sleep these mornings and there are odd moments of just sitting in pale gold sunlight loafing and content. Everything has a slower tempo once the maple leaves start turning. Small flocks of robins come through, but seem in no hurry to go south. My next-door neighbor hangs out another snowy wash and then pauses to chat with me and pick off some faded flowers. When she comes out again to feed the chickens she lingers to look out over the blue waters in front of her door.

My garden is bright with dahlia, chrysanthemum, marguerite, phlox, with late rose buds giving it a touch of June. Butterflies dance lazily to the crickets' tune. That waiting feeling is in the air again and all of us want to steep ourselves in sunlight against the dark days to come.

MURIEL WILSON'S THOUGHT FOR FOOD

Pot of Pickled Peppers

Is there anything more nostalgic than the smell of pickling in the kitchen?

Most of us remember the pickles our mother and grandmother used to make. No doubt what imprinted pickle-making on our memory was the lovely fragrance of vinegar and spices bubbling on the stove.

There are those who say that pickles have little or no food value while others, including some doctors, say they contain quite a goodly amount of vitamin A. Be that as it may, the appetizing qualities of pickles are high and they are popular because they make so many things taste better. Gourmets down through the ages have adored pickles and famous beauties like Cleopatra ate them to retain beauty and health. Because he thought it made them strong, Julius Caesar saw to it that his legions ate pickles every day. Well, whatever their properties, taste is the thing that makes them popular today.

Before the days of refrigeration, pickles furnished a sort of winter substitute for salads and the ability to make them was considered an index to housewifely skill. Actually no particular skill is required . . . by following a recipe anyone can make fine pickles and relishes.

All of a sudden (there is no fixed date) we know that summer is really over. It is as if a summons is received. There is a chill in the morning and evening air and we know that autumn is standing in the wings just waiting to take over completely. Autumn is pickle and preserving time so let's get on with it. Even if you only make a few bottles for company fare . . . homemade chili sauce, chutney or crisp cucumber sticks are real compliment winners. And who doesn't like a compliment?

First a repeat of last year's Pickled Red Pepper Strips. So many telephone requests have come in for this that I decieded to offer it again. Please clip it and don't lose it this time.

As I told you last year this was an experiment that was most successful . . . the colorful strips are both decorative and very good tasting. They dress up a salad, a sandwich plate or a casserole. When these gorgeous peppers are out of season it is fine to have a few bottles on the shelf. They are not soft and they do not taste like the canned pimentos. They are crisp and tangy-sweet.

The Recipe

I buy the largest finest looking peppers I can find. Wash them, cut them in half and remove the seeds. Cut them in narrow strips about a quarter of an inch wide. Place the strips in a large bowl and sprinkle with coarse pickling salt and toss a tray of ice cubes on top. Let stand for two or three hours (renew the ice cubes if necessarry) Place the strips in a colander and wash under the cold water tap. They are now ready to pack into hot sterilized jars . . . half pint jars are nice if you have them. Over them pour hot, spiced, sweet vinegar. Into each bottle I put a scant quarter teaspoon of powdered alum before pouring on the vinegar. Seal completely.

To make the spiced vinegar I use the same proportions I use for my sweet cucumber pickles . . . cup for cup of white distilled vinegar and white sugar. I put whole mixed spices in a cheesecloth bag and simmer with the vinegar until just the right spicyness is reached. You must taste to know when to remove the spice bag. Keep for about a month before using . . . They will be crunchy-crisp and delicious.

A few months ago a reader sent me a box of tiny hors d'oeuvres and aspic cutters (like little bitty cookie cutters) with a letter telling me she had used them to make red pepper stars, crescents, leaves, etc., from my recipe. Now besides the strips I am making some really fancy garnishes with the red peppers. The connecting pieces need not be wasted . . . they can be pickled separately and chopped when needed for casseroles and salads. Thank you, Mrs. Williams, for the little cutters and the accompaning suggestions.

For something a little different how about Fruit Chili? This is a medley of tomatoes, peaches, pears, apples, onions and red peppers. This is a relish that you won't find in shops and hints from Heloise

DEAR HELOISE:
I have a little baby and unfortunately do not have a washing machine. Therefore I have lots of diapers and laundry, requiring many trips to the washeteria (launderette).

I keep the soap and water softener in the car all the time; this saves lugging it to and from the car every time I go to the washeteria.

As for little babies, everyone has her own idea how to raise them. But I would like to pass along an idea from the nurses in our hospital.

They use what they call sugar-nipples to calm a baby and keep him quiet during an examination. It is a regular nipple with a piece of sterile cotton saturated in sugar water inside the nipple.

I got the idea of dipping the baby's pacifier into syrup when he gets himself into a frenzy. I find the syrup pacifier takes his mind off the immediate situation and gives his body a chance to rest.

It also works when the baby awakens in the middle of the night. —Housewife

SQUEEZE CORPS

DEAR HELOISE:
The gals may like the old-fashioned sprinklers and spray bottles to dampen clothes when ironing, but I find a damp sponge is far better.

I keep a pan of warm water on the end of my ironing board and just dip and squeeze the sponge, then wipe my cloth when needed. Have you ever thought how much time is wasted by picking up that bottle and finding the proper place to push and spray? Besides, I find a sponge doesn't overwet the material as a bottle sometimes does

NEAT AND TIDY

DEAR HELOISE:

I save all of my baby-food jars and lids and keep several of them handy by the washing machine. When I find loose buttons, nuts, bolts, etc. I put them into little separate jars. This makes it easy to return to the proper place later.

These jars are also very useful at the sewing machine to separate buttons, snaps and pins. The lids prevent spilling.

CUTTING REMARKS

DEAR GALS:

Don't laugh at this: Know those old paring and bread knives that were handed down in the family and rust so badly from time to time?

Remove the rust by dipping some steel wool in plain kerosene and just scour lightly. This removes rust from tools also. It actually works.

CANDLE WRAP-UP

DEAR HELOISE:

Instead of using foil to wrap around the base of a candle to make it "fit the hole" in the candelabra . . . I have found a paper napkin is far better.

Just tear off a piece of the paper napkin and wet it, wrap around the end of the candle and push it in the candelabra. The wet napkin doesn't show. It also sticks to the candle itself.

—Old Bachelor Grimes

STAIN STUNT

DEAR HELOISE:

We had twins a few years ago and I found that if I brushed the stains on their little garments with a solution of household cleanser that contained bleach and some hot water, and let sit, the stains would disappear.

This solution is just the greatest on a grape juice stain. I do not guarantee this procedure to work on a very old stain, but it might.

—Pat Dawson

HEY, MOMS!

I tried it on a very old stain I had (grease, not cod-liver oil) and left the paste in the garment for about an hour, and when I rinsed with hot water, my old stain was removed. Worth a try.

Remember that this should be tested, as the mixture DOES contain bleach, and if used on a colored fabric . . . just might leave a white circle.

—Heloise

FOUR HAIRCUTS

DEAR HELOISE:

I have four little girls . . . and I cut their hair. But let me tell you how I keep their bangs straight.

I just dampen the bangs with a comb dipped in water and then . . . remove a sheet of note paper with lines from their notebook folder.

By dampening the note paper slightly, it will "relax" over the forehead. Any mother can put the sheet of paper on the top of the child's head and use a "line" of the notepaper to use as a guide to cut her daughter's bangs. The wetter the paper, the better job I get!

LACE A RACK?

DEAR HELOISE:

For those who don't have a cooling rack, for icing cookies and cakes—there's no need to buy one.

Just remove the broiler from your oven before heating the stove and lay a thin cloth over it. Set your cake to cool on this after baking.

—Baker Blue

KEEP IT CLEAN

DEAR HELOISE:

Keep a child's water color brush near your sewing machine to remove lint from the delicate parts. Anyone who sews knows what a problem lint can be.

DEAR HELOISE:

My plated toaster lost its luster. I dipped the cloth in plain household vinegar and rubbed the surface, and now it shines like new again. (Polish with dry cloth).

HANDLE WITH CARE

DEAR HELOISE:

With a family of nine, I find that I have oodles of ironing to do and the handle of the iron often makes my hand sore. I have even had blisters.

My husband suggested covering the handle of my iron with a piece of an old silk dress. We cut a long piece about two inches wide and wrapped it around the handle, sewing the end piece.

This has eliminated blisters, and makes the handle soft and easy to pick up. Instead of my hand sticking to the plastic handle, it now gives a little . . . with each swipe of the iron.

Fruit Chili

Eight pounds peeled and chopped tomatoes, four peaches and four pears, pared and chopped, six good sized apples pared and chopped, 12 medium sized onions peeled and chopped, three large sweet red peppers seeded and chopped, two and a half tablespoons salt, seven tablespoons whole mixed pickling spice, three cups brown sugar, four cups cider vinegar. Combine all the fruit, onions, peppers and salt. Simmer uncovered for about an hour and a half. There should be enough juice from the fruit so that it won't stick when you start the cooking. If it is too dry use a little of the vinegar. After the first simmering the quantity will have reduced by about half. While cooking stir occasionally. Now add the vinegar, the sugar and the pickling spice in a bag. Cook uncovered until quite thick, stirring often. Pour into hot sterilized jars. Makes seven to eight pints. It is not necessary to cut the fruit and vegetables too fine.

This is a really lovely relish. If you like ginger cut a few pieces of preserved ginger into the pot. I put ginger in mine.

"Dilly Beans" have made a fortune for two enterprising New Yorkers. Going on the popularity of dilled cucumbers, these two girls decided to try "dilling" green beans. "Dilly Beans" took the public's fancy and now they are a best seller. Selling nationally, the girls stand to make a fortune. These crisp dilled beans are eaten with the fingers as one would eat olives. They are used in salads, in sandwiches and in martinis. 'Tis said that pickles love them and if that isn't a good reason for making some I'll give you another . . . "Dilly Beans" have inspired a new party sport . . . watching the expression of a novice trying his first one. But I'm not fooling when I tell you they are really good.

About now there is usually a fresh crop of green beans . . . they must be tender and pencil slim. Here are the ingredients.

Dilly Beans

Three pounds fresh tender green beans, fresh dill head, chopped, two cups water, two cups vinegar, four tablespoons salt, four teaspoons sugar, two cloves of garlic halved and a quarter to half a teaspoon Tabasco. Wash the beans and snip the ends and leave whole. Beans pack best if they are about four inches long. Parboil, covered, a few at a time, in unsalted boiling water in kettle five to ten minutes, or just until crisply tender. Don't over cook. Lift out with a slotted spoon, plunge at once in a large bowl with ice cubes to cool quickly. Pack beans upright in hot sterilized jars, place two tablespoons chopped fresh dill and one half clove of garlic in each jar. Heat water and vinegar, salt, sugar and Tabasco in medium saucepan to boiling. Pour into jars and fill right to tops. Seal, cool and store in a cool dry place.

Makes four jars.

"You Can Fool All the People Some of the Time . . ."

MEET A MAGICIAN

with

Vivienne Chadwick

It was a private theatre, and a private performance, especially for me! And the magician was very good indeed.

He is a gentleman who calls himself Ah Foo Yu . . . and he certainly does!

Three feet from this childishly fascinated reporter, who still couldn't see a thing except what was supposed to be seen, he stood behind his professional, painted stand and manipulated three cords of varying lengths. Very plainly he did nothing whatever to them but 'stretch' them a little—and suddenly they were all the same length. He rolled them up in swift hands and tossed them loose—and again they were the original lengths.

He set fire to things, and reproduced them unmarked. And he went through a fast, smooth routine involving cups and balls, a version of the shell and pea game of ancient circuses, in which for several minutes the balls kept turning up in all the places they couldn't possibly be.

The amusing patter kept pace with the tricks.

Finally he came up with a length of cord and a paper bag, and remarked that he probably needed more practice with this as it was very difficult, but he would drop the rope into the bag and it would come up tied. This failed several times, of course, to the performer's obvious distress, but eventually the trick was brilliantly successful—though not quite in the expected manner. We won't betray him . . .

Owen and Dulcie Fowler's home is at 2739 Thorpe Place, on the Uplands waterfront, with garden, beach and sea stretching before their windows. He has a telescope with which he says he watches boats and blondes, but his special hobby is his magic. He has always been interested in this, starting off as a small boy with trick-shop pocket affairs, which he considers an excellent way for a budding magician to begin his career. He is English-born, and many Victorians will remember when his family and later he himself, operated The Beehive, the wool shop originally located on Douglas Street. When he sold the business he turned to something which may have been in his mind for a long time—the making of a good soap which wouldn't shrink woollens. The well-known product Zero was the result.

One of the Magicians

Now he is retired. He took up magic really seriously several years ago, and, make no mistake about it, he has reached a most professional stage of proficiency. He practices continually, usually in front of a mirror, for practice is essential, he says, if a conjurer is not to lose his concentration and the cunning of his hands. He belongs to the Victoria Magic Circle, the Seattle Magic Club, the Pacific Coast Association of Magicians, and is a member of the International Brotherhood of Magicians, which last two organizations are affiliated.

It is a closely knit, close-mouthed fraternity. Its members guard their secrets jealously, which is understandable, as an illusion without mystery would be an illusion no longer. And the art of magic is a far more extensive business than most laymen realize. It's a very ancient craft, and there are dealers all over the world who cater to it. There are many of these in the United States, but as yet only a few in Canada. Their catalogues make the most intriguing reading . . . scores of tricks and feats are warily illustrated and described but the instructions come only with the purchased equipment. They range in price from 50 cents to several hundreds of dollars, and sometimes, says Owen Fowler, some inexpensive little gadget can produce as effective an illusion as one costing ten times the amount, so much depends on the presentation.

The annual conventions of the IBM this year's was held in July in Canada for the first time, at Vancouver, usually last about three days and they sound as if their members had more fun than all other conventions put together. Dealers and magicians arrive with their gear from all parts of the globe. The dealers display their newest tricks and illusions and perform them because they have to be magicians too. There are lectures by professionals, with movies of feats and methods of performance. The special highlight each year is the 'Night Before' at which only magicians attend, and the boys endeavor to bemuse each other. Wives and feminine friends, known as "Magigals," are permitted to attend conventions, and frequently assist, or even perform, though there seem to be not many women magicians.

Basement Workshop

Mr. and Mrs. Ah Foo Yu—they are both fond of the Oriental motif, and it characterizes much of the decor and furnishings of their home—have devoted the largest part of a spacious basement to the development, practice and presentation of magic. And they have done it up brown. There is a workshop where the conjurer and cabinet maker makes his own effects . . . a handy setup for sawing people in half, say, and an electrically lighted pyramid holding a number of glasses which he fills with as many different liquids from an impossibly small container. There is a library full of books on magic and club magazines and periodicals. You may not peruse these, being an outsider, but they contain, amongst other items, a quite hilarious article by Owen Fowler dealing with the woes of a magician who has been asked to perform for the Ladies' Aid, or some such, and finds the facilities not quite what he had hoped. (His own experience.) There is a den, presumably for study and practice, the walls of which are covered with cards and photographs of other artists, and programs. There is a large recreation room, about which more later, and the piece de resistance is a hall known, with beautiful aptitude, as "The Theatre Under the Stairs."

This is curtained off from its surroundings by bamboo blinds, which can be raised to the ceiling if the area is otherwise required. It seats between 50 and 60 people, and is complete with raised stage, Persian print curtains and black backdrop curtains made by Mrs. Fowler, all necessary lights, and an adjacent dressing room. The auditorium is lit by Chinese lanterns, and the removable walls are hung with bright masks, swords and fans. The whole thing is vivid, practical, delightful. Ah Foo Yu performs in a handsome Mandarin coat of royal blue, hand-embroidered with the Imperial five-toed dragon in gold—a present from his wife who went to Hong Kong for it. He also wears a little Oriental cap with a long tassel. He puts this on with the tassel over one eye, says crossly, "Oh, this always gets in the way, we'll throw

The 101st Battalion Was Strictly a Comox Outfit

Moore's Monsters They Were Called

By RUPERT WILLIAMS and RENE HARDING

101st Battalion?

Why, certainly there was a 101st Battalion! Moore's Monsters they were called.

When the 102nd Battalion, Warden's Warriors, pulled out of Comox Bay, in the Princess Charlotte on June 10, it left a definite void.

The activities of over 1,000 soldiers, with brass band, marching and practicing created an excitement that was sorely missed.

The young fry of the district decided on a rememdy and proceeded to form a reserve army.

Before the 102nd left many lads were issued with new puttees and caps. The reserve army issued themselves the discards.

The newly-formed company's band consisted of one bugler and a drum.

But they marched and marched, taking the same route marches as the 102nd.

Every evening they paraded to the post office and went through the ceremony of lowering the flag. The bugler played the last post, followed by a roll on the drum, while the "battalion" stood at the salute.

By the time the "battalion" was ready for action the Allies started winning the war without the 101st, and when they saw they would not be needed they just dissolved. But it was a wonderful experience for those who took part.

MEET A MAGICIAN

it out!" and pulls the tassel off and puts it down on the table from where it instantly jumps back to the cap!

His travelling kit with basic equipment is another ingenious affair which he has designed and made himself. It consists of a lightweight, suitcase-type box with handles, fitted with compartments for his magical gear. On the outside is painted his stage name, a dragon, and the Chinese characters for good luck, happiness and such. Opened up and set on a small wheeled stand, it becomes the counter behind which he works, and it is the matter of a moment to fold it and lock it. With this, and the wheeled stand under the other arm, he is ready to go.

He is business-like about his engagements, and keeps a list of tricks performed at each, to avoid repetition on a future occasion at the same place. He is careful, too, about what he does when performing for children. No dangerous feats involving razor blades, needles or matches . . . just in case his audience should be tempted to try to emulate him!

Ingenious Kit

On the evening of which I write, he had been preparing for a children's affair sponsored by the Kiwanis, to be held the following day at Shawnigan Lake, and a table held an amazing collection of entirely unrelated articles, including a small jar of milk. When I inquired what happened to this, he explained that he poured it into a newspaper cone which he would promptly unroll to show no milk and a dry paper. What he didn't explain was how he effected this. "It's done with mirrors," he said. 'Oh, all right!' I hope his milk went sour!')

As a matter of fact, Victoria's Magic Circle, like most of these clubs everywhere, does far more in the charitable line of entertainment than the public realizes. The IODE (which is Mrs. Fowler's special interest), the DVA, Goodwill, Salvation Army, William Head Penitentiary, Silver Threads, and most of the service clubs and the organizations for crippled children, all know the Magic Circle well. Present president is Don Robinson, and a particularly well-known member and past president is Ernie Crockford. The oldest Merlin of the group is Frank Merrifield, who is in his 80s and still active.

Free for Charity

All performances of this type, or at any fund raising affair, are given gratis, but in fairness to the profession a fee is charged for private parties, banquets, and the like. Conjurers, like singers, writers, lawyers and doctors, to name just a few, resent being expected to hand out largesse in the shape of knowledge which has cost them time, money and years of hard work to acquire. Except for charity.

In addition to their shared interest in music and magic, the Fowlers love boats and the sea. They spend much time aboard their cruiser Dulwen, and have bought one of the little Gulf Islands for their own on which to picnic and beachcomb. And they have an eye for driftwood and its potentialities, as is immediately seen in the recreation room.

This, says Owen Fowler, started off by being Oriental too, but it "got out of hand." However, the Chinese bamboo harmonizes extremely well with the nautical. A heavy driftwood table is lacquered to the same golden tone as the bamboo, as are driftwood lamps, utilized in their natural shapes. A seascape is framed by the knot-hole of a chunk of log, and lit from below. An enlargement of a cruiser, earlier owned, covers all the area above a wide fireplace, and is provided with an unusual frame of woven cod line, held at the corners by special knots the work of a sailor who really knew his ropes!

The fire guard is a boom chain, the poker is a boathook, and so on. Spreading houseplants, carefully spaced, add to a general feeling of outdoors.

There was a third member of the household present at the time of my visit. At least she was present at all times except when Ah Foo Yu was performing. Bubs, the toy Boston bull, doesn't care for magic, thank you. Now, whether or not we are insulting her by suggesting that whenever her master picks up a square of colored silk, his wand, or any of the other appurtenances of his art, he and not Miss Bubs is the one who gets all the attention, is uncertain. But the fact remains that if and when he does, he gets a dirty canine look and Bubs leaves the room. Not only that, but when he goes downstairs Bubs comes to the top step and watches him. If he turns toward the recreation room she leaps to join him, but if he heads for the magic cloisters she turns away disgustedly and goes to bed.

Bubs Unimpressed

What the lady does like is television. "Where is Bubs?" someone inquires. "Oh, she's downstairs watching TV." And she is. She does. She doesn't sit in front of it and go to sleep. She goes below when she thinks she'd like to be entertained, and barks for someone to come and turn it on. And then she sits up and follows the whole thing. She loves it when animals appear and barks and jumps about and argues with the screen. An enchanting wrath this. She wears a little plaid coat affair at night, and when she wishes to retire she goes and fetches her "nightie." She likes a cup of tea first, though, and perhaps just a small slice of cake.

But no magic. It may be that she is psychical, preferring things she can understand, and doesn't care to be mystified. And Ah Foo Yu's performance is certainly mystifying, in spite of his standard explanation for all his wizardry.

"It's all done with mirrors," he says.

It's not. You know!

AGNES CARNE TATE on a Duncan Ramble

FIRST TO THE ZOO, THEN THE SEASIDE

Three or four years ago some neighbors in the apartments where I live bought a couple of 50-cent-size turtles. To their surprise the turtles kept growing until one was eight inches long and the other six. In fact they were too large for their laundry basket home and cake pan pool.

So it was decided to drive up to Oyen's reptile zoo near Duncan and see if W. Oyen would like to have them. I was pleased to have the opportunity for this visit.

Tommy and Timmy were deposited between Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Homburg's feet in a basket and off we went.

At the zoo Mr. Homburg went up to the house trailer to seek out the owner and Mrs. Oyen came down to the car, followed by what looked like an animated fur neckpiece, lar-roping along. It was a tame ferret, as affectionate as a kitten.

Mrs. Oyen tucked the animal under her arm and introduced us to the rest of the menagerie. In one cage were two Capuchin monkeys with beautiful brown fur on their bodies and a ruff of cream around their necks.

Mrs. Oyen had to leave to attend to more visitors so we moved on to see how Tommy and Timmy liked their new quarters. There were four other turtles in the cage, of two different varieties, but Tommy had disappeared under a rock and didn't want to come out. After his laundry basket he must have felt that he had been let loose in the big wide world.

If anyone is looking for a big city zoo at Oyen's he will be disappointed, but there are a number of native animals there in close to natural surroundings. The zoo was moved nearer the highway a few months ago and the cages are dotted along a woodland path.

As we were all members of George Clutesi's Indian folk lore classes, we were interested in Ko-ishin-dist, the raven who was the hero — or villain — of so many of the tales. I had always thought of a raven as being a larger crow but he isn't. He is a larger bird but his plumage is a gleaming blue black and he has a larger beak.

Wide Publicity

SOME OF THE REPTILES in the reptile house received coast-to-coast publicity a few weeks ago when a postal clerk in Victoria said their entry was illegal and sent them on to Ottawa with a recommendation that they be destroyed. Mr. Oyen pointed out that they couldn't be destroyed because he had claimed them and the parcel had a return address. The Ottawa post office agreed with him, so he got his reptiles back. In the end, Mr. Oyen was very pleased with the affair as he appeared on television, was heard on the radio, was written up in newspapers and figures he got about $10,000 worth of free advertising out of it.

The lizards alone are worth the price of admission. The beauty of the designs on their bodies and the shimmering, gleaming iridescence of their coloring is almost beyond belief. The pearl lizards of Egypt were to me, the loveliest and there were the gheko lizards, without which no story of tropical romance is complete, the kind that live in the bungalow ceilings and dine off mosquitoes and such.

We went on to Duncan to deliver some books to the caretaker of the Dutch Christian Reformed Church there. The Dutch there, as in Victoria, want their children to be taught the tenets of their own religion, so they are starting a school in Duncan like the one in Victoria. The children are taught the regular B.C. curriculum but have religious instruction also.

Lost Art

MR. AND MRS. M. VISSER were jokingly told that they weren't real Dutch as they came from Friesland, a province of Holland that has its own language, and consists mainly of low lying islands off the coast. Mrs. Visser showed us a picture of her mother in the kind of headdress that used to be worn in her village. It consisted of a head-fitting cap made of gold (metal) covered with handmade lace that hung in a frill in the back and had two gold leaves standing up at the sides of the forehead. I said I thought it looked like an adaption of a Norseman's helmet but Mrs. Visser didn't think that was its origin. She says no one wears the caps any more—her mother sold hers and got gold watches for the family. No one knows how to make the handmade lace or do the embroidery and no one wears the village costumes any more. Such is progress.

We were on the road leading to the Cowichan and Koksilah Indian Reserves and as Mr. Homburg is keenly interested in Indians and is always looking for old long-houses and dugouts to take pictures of we drove down there to look the country over. The delta of the Koksilah is beautiful and somewhere down there on a narrow dirt road we saw an old house that I would like to know more about. It was so overgrown with trees, that only two of the upper windows could be seen from the road.—

Intriguing Home

AS WELL AS COULD BE SEEN from the driveway, it was a two-storey house with a large verandah and seemed to be about 80 or more years old. What took my eye was a large clump of bamboo gone wild at the gate—which made me wonder who the original or former owners were and where they had come from. There was a high, unpainted picket fence and an overgrown orchard that hadn't been tended for years. There was also a dog, so the place was occupied but we didn't want to appear too nosey. Now I wish we hadn't been so polite.

A little farther on we came to a swamp where bulrushes were growing and for old times' sake I asked if it were possible to get me some. At one time no Victorian home was complete without bulrushes as part of its interior decoration. In summertime they stood in front of the fireplace and in wintertime they served instead of flowers.

My mother used to keep hers in a pair of three-foot-high Japanese vases in the parlor. The parlor was only used on special occasions, particularly in the winter, as the only way of heating it was by the open fireplace. One day mother opened the door and thought there'd been an indoor snowstorm. Some of the rushes had burst and the air was thick with their down. The others were quickly disposed of and after that bulrushes found no part of our decor. I hope mine don't burst.

We had a picnic supper at the site of the burned down hotel overlooking Cowichan Bay, then drove down the Cherry Creek Road and came out on a bay with a small creek emptying into it.

Fourth Passenger

PERHAPS I SHOULD EXPLAIN that there was a fourth passenger. This was young Sipka Pyle, a Dutch-Canadian high school boy who was a guest of the Homburgs while he had a summer job packing school books at the Legislative Buildings. He is a poet, philosopher, composer and organist, and his idea of light entertainment is to read the score of a Bach concerto. He says he can hear the music. With all this he is so quiet that Mr. Homburg's favorite expression is "Sipka you talk too much."

He is also an amateur archaeologist and is keenly interested in Indian remains.

When we got to the beach he started to look for signs or artifacts although no Indians are known to have lived or sojourned there. Soon he came tearing back to report he thought he had found a midden.

Now it is against the law in B.C. to dig in an Indian midden but a couple of clam shells don't make a midden any more than two swallows make a summer. Also neither a teaspoon nor a can opener can properly be called digging tools so I don't think either Mr. Homburg or Sipka were violating any laws when they set to work on the bank of the stream. Sipka found two bones which he seemed to regard as some sort of treasure.

Mr. and Mrs. Homburg had found a new home for Tommy and Timmy. Sipka had his bones and I had my bulrushes. What more could anyone ask of a pleasant afternoon?

Belatedly Authorities Mark Jordan River's

HALF CENTURY of SERVICE

By AUSTIN GOWARD

Lost in the shuffle of records over the years was the date for first delivery of power from Jordan River to Victoria.

In Myers' "90 Years of Public Utility Service on Vancouver Island" it is stated "it seems reasonable to suppose (Jordan River) went into official and continuous operation early in 1912." And that's the closest anyone had been able to come in spite of wide research.

Until recently! Now the first log book of the Jordan River plant has come to light with this interesting entry for Sept. 10, 1911:

"Started generator at 8:05 p.m. and synchronized with Victoria at 8:24 p.m."

On the heels of this discovery came another find: the journal of Frank Hudson, for many years—1908 to 1950—an operator at the Rock Bay and Bay Street substations. He made an entry reading: "Jordan River plant started Sept. 10, 1911 . . ."

Somewhat late, it is now recognized that the Jordan River plant has been serving lower Vancouver Island for over half a century.

For most of these years, Jordan River has been the mainstay operation, with assistance from the old-timer Goldstream (1897) and Brentwood, which came into operation soon after Jordan River. The submarine cable inter-connection with power sources on the Mainland was completed in 1956.

First surveys were made at Jordan River in 1907 and water rights were staked in that year. G. M. Tripp, for many years B.C. Electric Company's general superintendent on the Island, was one of the very few men familiar with the area, and was aware of the possibilities there. It was due to him more than any other person that this source of power was developed to serve the growing communities.

Preliminary work was started on the project in 1909. There were no roads to the area, 42 miles up the West Coast from Victoria. Men, material, supplies and equipment had to be transported by ship, and drawn up on the beach by barge. From there to the site of construction horse-drawn vehicles took over. First camp was established on the beach near the river mouth and became the base of operations in the reconnaissance work which eventually led to the harnessing of Jordan River. Thus the curtain was raised on an engineering project that led to the development of 41,750 h.p. and an expenditure of approximately $5,000,000.

The original unit was of 5,500 h.p. A second unit of 5,500 h.p. was installed in 1912, a third of 10,500 h.p. in 1914, and an automatic power station of 2,250 h.p. was installed within the diversion dam structure in 1928.

With the connection of the fourth unit the generating capacity of Jordan River reached 41,750 h.p.

It is interesting to note that the plant has the highest Ambursen-type diversion dam in Canada, 126 feet from the lowest foundation and 891 feet along the crest. The head of water at Jordan River power house is 1,150 feet. The dam is about 7½ miles upstream from the power house.

Today, Jordan River is still producing, and playing a big part in the Island economy.

Present supervisor of the operation is George Moody, who has been in charge since 1957. First superintendent was D. I. Walker, who held the position until 1937, when he was succeeded by J. M. Elliott. Jack started at the river as a timekeeper in 1916. He was followed in 1955 by Lewis Fall who served until 1957.

These men have kept flowing over the years the energy that has built industry and brightened the homes of the southern Island communities.

New Quest for Power Follows Old Plan

seen that Sproule had staked, Hammill had somehow managed to bring the gold commissioner from Wildhorse with him and in this way was able to jump Sproule's claims by recording first. Sproule, however, had interests in Montana and it was through his Helena friends that Baillie-Grohman was persuaded to join the mining enterprise. Early in 1883 Grohman inspected the Big Ledge and wrote "that in future I had better speak of it as the Blue Bell which is the name of the principal claim."

Judgment for Sproule

The dispute went through the courts where judgment was in Sproule's favor, but the costs of litigation were beyong Sproule's means and the claims went by default to end in the hands of the Ainsworth syndicate.

The loss of this property seems to have affected Sproule's mind and thinking that Baillie-Grohman had doublecrossed him he twice tried to kill him. Later he shot and killed from ambush, on the Blue Bell claim, Thomas Hammill, the leader of the Ainsworth party.

(The Hammill murder story, Sproule's flight, capture and the efforts of United States authorities to secure his release has been covered in detail by Cecil Clark in the Islander August 3 and 10, 1958.)

Great Land Venture

Mr. Grohman's associations with mining and the other misfortunes that beset him arose through his attempting to reclaim alluvial land. He had begun negotiations with the British Columbia government for 48,000 acres of wet land at the head of Kootenay Lake. There could be no doubt but that this land was of great agricultural value if the overflow that occurred every summer could be controlled.

The Ainsworth interests also recognized the value of this land and at the session of the B.C. Legislature 1882-1883 there was a private bill before the house granting Ainsworth not only these alluvial lands, but others amounting to 750,000 acres. The Ainsworth plan failed because certain influential interests backed Mr. Grohman's application. The land Ainsworth wanted included practically all the land around Kootenay Lake and in exchange he proposed to build a short narrow gauge railway.

"My object," Mr. Grohman wrote, "was to reclaim 48,000 acres and to pay one dollar an acre for it within 10 years."

Imported Vessel

One of the conditions of the Grohman land concession was that he must operate a steamer on the navigable portions of Kootenay Lake and river. After investigating boatbuilding prices in Oregon it was found cheaper to bring a small steamer from England and one of Mr. Grohman's friends had such a boat. The little steamer, really a steam launch, was shipped deck load, to Montreal, where after a hassle with customs it was admitted, duty free, as farm machinery. From Montreal it was taken to Duluth, loaded on Northern Pacific flat cars, and billed to Sand Point, Idaho. From Sand Point the launch was literally carried, dragged and rolled by a dozen white men and twice as many Indians over 40 miles of rough trail, where after three weeks' back-breaking labor it was launched in Kootenay waters at [illegible] ranch—Bonner's Ferry.

The Midge as the little ship was called, was the first steamer to navigate any part of Kootenay Lake or river.

Mr. Grohman wrote enchantingly of exploring around the lake, of little bays where they stopped to camp or to gather fuel for the boiler or to find shelter from the wind. It was a delight to [illegible] white man had been there and he foresaw the time when tidy farms and homesteads would line the water's edge.

Treat for Indians

Grohman wrote: "The greatest thing about the Midge was her whistle and to get permission to pull the string and to send forth a shrill blast was the most prized privilege I could bestow on any Indian. This was often put to good use, for by providing a [illegible] an Indian would cut a lot of wood just for the joy of sounding the whistle."

Now all this is but leading up to the main purpose of Grohman's objective which was to divert the Kootenay River into the Columbia and by so doing prevent high water overflowing the alluvial lands at Kootenay Flats.

In the main the scheme was perfectly feasible and was considered in two of the three recent studies for full power development of the Columbia-Kootenay watershed.

The source of the Columbia River in Columbia Lake is less than a mile from the Kootenay River which flows in the opposite direction and the land lying between is a flat stretch of gravel. By Grohman's measurements the Kootenay was 11 feet higher than the Columbia. Hence it would be simple to divert the Kootenay and prevent the flooding of the Flats. Actually, Grohman contended, this would do more than restoring things to their original state, as there can be no doubt but that in recent times this condition existed, for in no other way could Kokanee [illegible] salmon be accounted for in Kootenay Lake, it being impossible for fish to overcome the high falls below the city of Nelson.

Beyond B.C. Power

Although Grohman's concessions gave him the right to divert the Kootenay into the Columbia it was a mistake. It should never have been granted, as both Grohman's lawyers and those of the B.C. government overlooked that under the Act of Confederation matters of this kind, pertaining to streams and navigable waters were under federal control.

In 1882 when the scheme was first considered there was nobody in the Kootenays and changes in the direction and volume of river flow would have injured nobody. But in 1883 when provincial authorities were unaware that railway construction was proceeding along the banks of the Columbia. Naturally, when the Canadian Pacific learned of the proposal it took steps to halt the work.

As a result Grohman's concession was annulled and he was compensated by a gift of 30,000 acres of [illegible] land in the upper Kootenay Valley. This land was to be [illegible] after Grohman had completed a navigation canal between the two rivers to the satisfaction of the Dominion government. Diversion had to be abandoned and instead a canal with locks must be constructed. This helped Grohman not at all because the lock gates, according to the agreement, must always be closed during high water.

Grohman wrote that if he had realized the troubles ahead he would have abandoned the project then and there. Instead he continued to throw good money after bad, for, to build the lock it was necessary to erect a sawmill to cut lumber for the project.

Excavation for the 6,700 foot canal offered no difficulty, but the construction of the locks and floodgates to meet Ottawa specifications was very troublesome. Heavy seepage was encountered, steam pumps were imported to keep the workings dry, and very deep foundations were necessary.

Then after the job was done, and much money spent the whole thing came to naught for only a year after Grohman selected his 30,000 acres of wet lands the government budgetted $2,500 to close the canal for fear that an extra high freshet would destroy the works and accomplish Grohman's original scheme — diverting the Kootenay into the Columbia.

Grohman's next scheme to reclaim his lands on the Kootenay Flats was to widen and deepen the outlet of Kootenay Lake just below the present city of Nelson. American and British engineers had expressed favorable opinions on the feasibility of the scheme; large sums of money were being spent on the project until disputes between the stockholders in Britain, the provincial government and with Grohman brought the work to a stop.

"Hard as it was to retire," Grohman wrote, "from an enterprise which I had created and to which I had sacrificed some years of hard work, I cut myself loose from the undertaking."

Wasted Efforts

The company that took control did not succeed. Influenced by advice suggested by the provincial government the Grohman scheme of enlarging the outlet of the lake was abandoned and it was decided to reclaim the marsh land by dyking, an engineering feat on which five years' work and a quarter million dollars were spent.

"It has proved abortive," Grohman wrote, "for the overflow has continued in spite of high dykes many miles in length." And in the years to follow much damage from overflow has resulted and the danger will continue until one of the three engineering schemes for the full development of the Kootenay-Columbia basin is completed.

When we review the proposals in present light it is quite clear that both Grohman's schemes were perfectly sound and had either been completed before settlement began development of the Kootenay country would have taken place to conform to the geophysical conditions that Grohman envisaged.

In 1963 we may see the beginning of work for the full development of the power resources of the Kootenay-Columbia basin and it is more than likely that it will include the diversion scheme that Baillie-Grohman conceived in 1883 — 80 years ago.

Surely it would be a generous gesture if some part of the work honored his name.

Is it not almost an insult to Grohman's memory that two small, adjacent creeks flowing into the Kootenay River just below Nelson should be named Grohman Creek and Sproule Creek?

Sproule, you will recall, made two attempts on Grohman's life and came to his own bad end standing on the trap of a gibbet with black cap over his head and a noose of rope around his neck.

English Author Complains

BRITONS WON'T ALLOW QUEEN TO BE HUMAN

THE MAGIC OF THE BRITISH MONARCHY, by Kingsley Martin. Boston: Little, Brown & Co. 192 pp. $4.75.

"In the 20th Century anyone can question the divinity of Christ, but not attribute faults to the Royal Family."

The utterer of these words is no cynical foreigner, but an elderly Englishman, albeit one of a radical cast of mind. Kingsley Martin doesn't share the average Briton's awe of royalty, nor does he lower his voice to the customary hushed reverence in discussing the institution of monarchy. On the other hand, he doesn't write with quite the degree of freedom one feels he would use were he discussing, say, the French presidency or the German chancellory.

No, even for a longstanding iconoclast like Kingsley Martin a book on the British monarchy must be written with the caution of a man walking on eggshells. 'Twas not always thus. A century ago a republican movement actually existed in England. It didn't amount to much, but it had a few supporters in high places. To the best of my knowledge, this book is the first to accord it the dignity of a movement. It faded as the Empire grew, and is now no more than a footnote in history books.

Mr. Martin makes no attempt to revive it, but he objects strenuously to the aura of magic with which the British royal family is now surrounded.

"A glorified religious view of royalty is the vogue today," he protests. "The Queen is not allowed to wear a crown; nothing less than a halo will suffice."

What particularly irks him is that "writers and speakers change gears every time they mention royalty; their reverent phraseology makes the innumerable books about royal personages astonishing to foreign readers who do not share our novel habit of simultaneously staring and genuflecting."

Mr. Martin likens this official sanctification of royalty to the custom of primitive tribes which appointed some persons or institution to preserve the tribal taboos. He is not—Heaven forbid—advocating the abolition of royalty. (If he did, he'd be run out of town on a rail, his grey hairs nothwithstanding.) What he would like to see instead is a commonsense attitude to the Crown similar to that of the Scandinavian countries. These nations, he points out, are really "republics which find it convenient to maintain hereditary presidents." Such a statement pleases most Americans.

However, he doesn't see much chance of this happening in Britain in the foreseeable future. The popular press and television have dedicated themselves to propagating the magic of the Throne, and the people seem to like it. The book is rich in fatuous quotations from the public prints demonstrating this awe-struck attitude. A letter to The Observer speaks of "the extraordinary miracle of a royal birth," while the Archbishop of Canterbury deemed the coronation of Elizabeth II to be "not far from the Kingdom of Heaven."

How long will the monarchy survive in Britain? "If it maintains itself as head of a social class and a vanishing economic order," predicts Mr. Martin, "it will last as long as this social order remains—and no longer."

This is a rational book on a subject rarely treated at all, let alone rationally. Coming from a Briton in Britain, it is also a daring utterance.

THIS CHARMING FAMILY PORTRAIT would seem to counter the author's charge that the Queen is not allowed to wear a crown, and only a halo will suffice.

BEST SELLER FROM BRAZIL

GABRIELA, by Jorge Amado. New York: Alfred A. Knopf Inc. 426 pp. $5.95.

Publishers are understandably enthusiastic about their own books, but in this case the publisher's pleasure in his Brazilian novel is likely to be shared by its readers. Gabriela has been a best seller in its native land and is being translated into a dozen tongues. It should delight in all of them, since it is escape fiction of the most artless and alluring kind. Nothing is calculated to propel you further from our age of anxiety than the story of Gabriela and her lover, Nacib.

Jorge Amado has set his tale in his native town of Ilheus, a small Brazilian port north of the provincial capital, Bahia. His feat is a substantial one: he has brought to life an entire town and its inhabitants. Ilheus was an uncouth, rough-diamond backwater till the boom began in cacao. When the story opens money is beginning to flow into the town from the sale of crops, buildings are springing up, the population is growing, progress is in the air.

Amado loves his Ilheus well enough to linger over every step in the process. He takes us to the poetry readings, the religious parades, and all the other diversions of the simple poor. He crowds his stage with a large cast of characters, some of them difficult to differentiate till you come to know them. Then you join in their unsophisticated pleasures. And what are these? For the women, it is going to church, raising their children, and watching their husbands like hawks. For the men it is going to church, dominating their families, and maintaining their mistresses.

From the general Amado moves to the particular—to the saloonkeeper Nacib and the mulatto girl Gabriela he hires as a cook. The on-again, off-again romance of these two is what gives the book its distinctive joie de vivre. Gabriela is a kittenish creature devoted to her man and master. His mistake was to marry her, garb her in fine plumage, and try to turn her into a respectable matron. You will have to read the book yourself to learn how Nacib learned his lesson and how, unlike us poor mortals, he was able to start all over again.

Analyzing so unsubtle a tale is like taking a flower to pieces to see what it consists of. Gabriela consists of a central romance, which in turn is part of a portrait of a small town attaining growth and maturity. Its charm resides in its air of innocence, which it wears without apology. How agreeable, it makes one feel, to have lived in a time when progress meant the removal of a sandbar at the harbor mouth and when the principal problem of the young bucks was how to slip out of their homes to dally with their sweethearts.

Amado writes as though Ilheus were an isolated community unaware of anything bigger or anything worse than its cafe gossip. And that is how the book should be read—as an escape from reality and return to innocence.

When the Old Pantages Theatre is Rejuvenated As Part of Mayor Wilson's Beautification Program

asks James K. Nesbitt

One of the features of Mayor R. B. Wilson's plan to rejuvenate the whole City Hall area is the bringing back to life of the old Pantages Theatre.

If there has been anything constituting a blot on the face on that part of Government Street in recent years it has been what several generations of Victorians called the "Pan." I feel sad everytime I go by; there's this once very elegant theatre lonely and forlorn, dirty and tattered, dreaming, I hope, of its past, and now, with Mayor Wilson at the helm, dreaming, too of the future, when it will be spruced up and again "packing 'em in."

Victoria was a great theatre town 50 years or so ago. All the big stars and the opulent touring companies came here, for it was said that on the entire Pacific Coast save San Francisco there was no place that loved theatre more.

When I started a little research on the Pantages Theatre it came as a surprise to me to find that it was started just a few months before the Royal Victoria Theatre was opened in December of 1913. It's difficult to believe two such large theatres building at the same time in the Victoria of that era, which had a population so much smaller than the Greater Victoria of today.

The Colonist told the news of the start of the Pantages, in August of 1913: "Bids will be called immediately for the erection of the handsome new theatre which will be built by Messrs. McPherson and Fullerton and Mr. R. T. Elliott on the property on the east side of Government Street, just north of Cormorant.

"The plans, which have been prepared by Mr. Jesse M. Warren, call for a modern structure with the most up-to-date facilities. The cost of the building when completed will be in the neighborhood of $150,000.

"The new theatre, which will be one of the Pantages circuit, will seat 1,000. It will be absolutely fireproof and special attention will be paid to the ventilation.

"The exterior appearance of the building will be particularly attractive and will prove a decided improvement to that section of Government Street."

Work on the "Pan" was rushed, and it was ready for opening in May of 1914. Premier Sir Richard McBride did the honors at "a special matinee performance, attended by a large number of well-known residents of Victoria."

The handsome, white-haired premier received an ovation when he appeared before the footlights to praise the new theatre and thank the men who had built it. Alexander Pantages made a speech and then the program started.

The Colonist said "it consisted of several selections by the orchestra, under Mr. Antonio's direction, and a moving picture sketch, and a number of skilful feats of juggling by deArno.

MISS EVA HART, in the days when she was Victoria's leading lady.

Messrs. Dottson and Gordon gave a clever exhibition of dancing, the latter gaining much applause for his imitation of roller skating.

"'The First Law of Nature,' a melodramatic one-act play, was well acted by Miss Martha Russell and Messrs. Gordon Hamilton and William Rath. Miss Halligan and Mr. Sykes delighted the audience for some 10 minutes with their comic dialogue with its many bits of local color.

"The finale was 'The Baby Dolls' in 'The Candy Ship' with Miss Ethel Davis as the leading lady, and a crew of fair sailors who danced the hornpipe with much verve and served as background to the antics of Mr. Lou Davis and Mr. Charles Byrnes on their way to open the Panama Canal."

It was the golden era of vaudeville, the days before the 1914-18 war broke out. Soon after the opening of the Pantages a young man named Al Jolson trod its boards and brought the house to roars of laughter and tears as well, though it was before the days of his "Mammy."

And then came another Jolson, as announced in The Colonist: "Several weeks ago Al Jolson starred in 'The Honeymoon Express' — now comes his brother Harry to entertain Pantages audiences. This Jolson is billed as an operatic blackface comedian and is said to have as much ability, if not reputation, as his relative."

At the risk of dating myself I shall report that one of the leading memories of my boyhood was the evening I, with my classmates from St. Louis College, went to the Pantages to see Robert Mantell in "Richelieu." It was my first experience with the theatre, an experience I shall never forget. I hear now, after all these years, the voice of Mantell, and I see the lights and the costumes—the brilliant red, particularly, of the Cardinal's robes. I remember being quite unable to believe that such thrilling spectacles could take place on a stage. I do not know what year it was, and perhaps it is as well. I have searched the newspapers and cannot find any mention of Mantell, but I know that I saw him in "Richelieu" at the Pantages Theatre.

I remember the Saturday afternoon vaudeville acts at the "Pan," and I remember the curtain — it was filled with advertisements. I seem to remember the New England Cafe and Levy's restaurants and Sam Scott who sold boys' clothes. I wonder whatever happened to that curtain which so fascinated me as a child. The whole wide world of Victoria was spread out before me on that curtain. Some of my colleagues tell me elephants used to lumber about on the Pantages stage, but I do not remember them. But I think I remember green and white lights to the side of the stage — which spelled out the various acts—A, B, C, D, and so on.

It's a splendid theatre that reminds me of the St. James on Broadway and the Curran and the Geary in San Francisco. I'm glad the mayor's going to open it up.

Hard times came upon the Pantages in the mid-1920s. It was in a bad part of town—miles from the residential districts. It struggled and it struggled, and more than one manager went broke. It tried pictures and stock, but the audiences from Oak Bay and Fairfield wouldn't go near Chinatown. For a time it was called the Empire and then the York, and then the Totem. About a decade ago the dear old place called it quits—and it has been dark ever since.

I'm glad it wasn't pulled down. When the mayor's plan reaches fruition that part of town will be well lighted; there'll be a plaza with fountains and adequate parking, and the old Pantages should come into its own.

And now about a name? New York has its theatres called Helen Hayes and Ethel Barrymore, Mark Hellinger and Brooks Atkinson.

How about calling the old "Pan" the Eva Hart, after one of the daintiest and most beloved actresses and singers who ever delighted countless Victorians?

Eva Hart, now Mrs. John Q. Gillan of Victoria, boasting she's past 80, and she still sings like a bird, through many years was a great trouper and a fine singer, and she made the Victoria stage live, and those of us who saw her the other side of the floodlights will never forget her.

And so I think the rejuvenated Pantages Theatre should be called the Eva Hart. How about it, Mr. Mayor? The whole town will back you.
